ARMS CONTROL: The two leaders agreed to accelerate the arms

FUTURE MEETINGS: The leaders announced that they would meet at two additional summit sessions—one next year in the United States and another in 1987 in the Soviet Union, according to U.S. officials. They agreed to the additional meetings on Wednesday, the last day of the Geneva session, after a dinner at President Ronald CULTURAL ISSUES: The two sides reached a solid accord to resume U.S.-Soviet cultural exchanges. The agreement was signed during the closing ceremony by Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze.

Exchanges of performers, students, teachers and scientists were sharply-curtailed by former President Jimmy Carter in retaliation for the Soviet intervention in Afghanistas in 1979.

AIR SAFETY: The United States and the Soviet Union also agreed to establish new communication links to improve air salety in the North Pacific to avoid incidents such as the Soviet downing of a South Korean jetliner two years ago. CONSULATES: A separate agreement cleared the way for a new

Western Europe Urged By Mitterrand to Plan Space-Arms Safeguards

By Michael Dobbs

PARIS - President François Mitterrand of France, staying away from a post-summit briefing by President Ronald Reagan in Brussels, called Thursday for coopera--tion among West European coun-- tries to counter a possible extension of the arms race into space.

 Mr. Mitterrand, addressing his first formal press conference in 18 ·months, described the outcome of the Geneva summit meeting as a "hopeful sign" for East-West relations. But he went on to distance France from the arms negotiations now under way between the United ·States and the Soviet Union and "reasserted the importance of main-taining an independent nuclear de-· terrent.

Mr. Mitterrand's decision not to attend the special session of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in Brussels marked the second time in less than a month that he has turned down an opportunity to meet with Mr. Reagan. Ouestioned about his failure to attend the New York meeting, Mr. Mitterrand said that he was opposed to creation of a Western political "directorate."

WASHINGTON — The House of Representatives has voted overwhelmingly, over the objections of the Reagan administration, to strengthen the authority of the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff by giving him greater access to the president and supervision of field commanders.

The bill, which was passed by a vote of 383-27, would make the most far-reaching legal changes in the organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in more than 25 years. It now goes to the Senate, where the Armed Services Committee is working on its own plan to reorga-nize the Joint Chiefs.

Both efforts reflect concern that U.S. military forces lack the unity that was intended when the Defense Department was established in 1947 and instead have become fieldoms caught up in a fierce competition for missions and funding

The Joint Chiefs is currently made of a chairman, the chief of staff of the army, the chief of naval operations, the chief of staff of the air force and the commandant of the marine corps. The chairman is appointed by the president.

The bill approved by the House would make the chairman of the Joint Chiefs, rather than all five members of the Joint Chiefs as a group, the principal military adviser to the president and the secretary of defense. Other members of the group would have the right to enter dissenting views with the president or the secretary.

The bill would further authorize the president or the secretary of defense, the first and second in the chain of command, to place the chairman as No. 3 and give him the authority to supervise the com-manders of combat forces in the field. That would make formal what is an informal arrangement

The legislation also provides for a deputy chairman of the Joint Chiefs who would be another fourstar officer but would come from a service different from that of the

The bill would require the chairman to submit recommendations on the annual military budget to the secretary of defense, currently the province of the service chiefs of staff and the secretaries of the army, navy and air force.

The intent of that provision would be to bring a wider, less parochial view to budget decisions and to reduce the duplication of weapons and equipment that runs up military costs every year.

Dr. George A. Keyworth 2d, the White House science adviser, and officials from the Defense Department and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration are pushing to build that consensus.

They carried their message of technological possibility to a meeting Wednesday of the Aviation Forum, an informal group of members of Congress.

Recent developments in engine technology, light materials and computer controls have created the situation where "we're on the verge of technological revolutions, not evolutions," Mr. Keyworth said.

He said research has made it possible to foresee an airplane that "can take off from a standard airport run-way. It can cruise at very high speeds — in the neighbor-low Earth orbit."

He communed: "That means we're talking about an aircraft that can not only make possible virtually one-hour travel between here and the Far East, but one that can become a relatively inexpensive, flexible means for access

Passenger fares similar to those on a Boeing 747 today are conceivable, he added.

The fastest growing commercial aviation market is across the Pacific, but flights from the United States to Tokyo and beyond now take 13 hours or more.

This research effort, known as the Orient Express, is named after the famous European passenger train that ran from Paris to Istanbul. A restored version now is in

If prospects look good after that, they would then want to build an experimental aircraft for $2 billion to $3 billion and have it flying by the early 1990s. The Defense Department would pay 80 percent of the cost, and the space agency 20 percent.

Mr. Keyworth said that "the president has not yet been briefed," but added that there is "zero doubt in my mind there will no negative votes." He expressed optimism that there will be "overwhelming public support."

Army Reportedly Put Off Probe of Elite U.S. Unit

By Charles R. Babcock and Caryle Murphy

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The army agreed to suspend an investigation last month into alleged financial irregularities by its elite Delta force counterterrorist team after the team's commander complained that the probe could impede a possible rescue attempt of passengers aboard the hijacked cruise ship Achille Lauro, according to informed sources.
The sources said the warning was delivered in the Pentagon by the force commander, Colonel William Garrison, to General Max R. Thurman, the army's vice chief of staff, after investigators arrived at the group's headquarters at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, to question embers of the unit.

The investigation includes allegations of more than $200,000 in double billings by members of the unit, the First Special Forces Oper-ational Detachment — Delta (Airborne). The inquiry was suspended until the Delta force returned from the Middle East, the sources said.

One source said that Colonel Garrison told General Thurman that if his men were tied down at Fort Bragg by the financial inquiry, "he wouldn't have the operators he needed" for a possible rescue at-

Panel Urges Steps to Curb Spying in U.S.

By Stephen Engelberg
New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — A Pentagon

commission studying ways to deter espionage recommended Thursday a broad array of security measures, including a significantly expanded program of random polygraph, or lie-detector, tests for military personnel and civilian contractors.

The commission's report also calls for a program of financial re-wards for informers who turn in spies. It recommends substantial reductions in the storage of unneeded classified material, more limited use of secret classifications and reductions in the number of people who have access to classi-fied material.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger is to decide which recommendations to adopt; some would require congressional action.

The commission was set up in July, after the arrest of John A. Walker Jr., a retired navy chief warrant officer, on espionage charges. Mr. Walker and his son, Michael Lance Walker, pleaded guilty last month to spying for the Soviet Union. The elder Walker's brother, Arthur J. Walker, was convicted of espionage in August.

The report proposes stiffer penalties for defense contractors who violate security rules and calls for spot checks of military personnel and civilian defense employees and their briefcases or satchels. It also would require some active-duty personnel to report all foreign travel and would forbid military persomei and contractors to work with sensitive information in a room by themselves.

A commission member said the group had urged Mr. Weinberger to order a complete review of secunity procedures by all military commands to assess whether they were following existing rules.

commission's 63 recommendations have proved difficult to solve. They said some of the group's proposals, such as reduction of the amount of classified information, had been tried unsuccessfully by previous administrations. But the officials believe the recent espionage cases have spurred new support for better security in Congress and in the military's commands.

"We're redoubling our efforts," a Pentagon official said, referring to the push for tighter security brought on by the Walker case and other recent espionage cases.

"This commission was carefully picked to include the people who will have to follow it up," the official said. "I wouldn't write this off as just another commission."

The panel, headed by a retired army general, Richard G. Stilwell. included representatives from each of the Pentagon agencies covered by its recommendations. The proposal for expanded use of the polygraph is likely to encounter opposition on Capitol Hill, where critics have said that such examinations are unreliable and are often used as a substitute for more time-consuming methods of

The validity of polygraph tests is hotly disputed, with experts' esti-mates of their accuracy ranging from 50 percent to 99 percent.

Congress has permitted the Defense Department to establish a program over the next three years under which it would administer 14,000 polygraph tests to certain officials with access to materials classified as "top secret" or higher. The commission member said the panel had urged that this program be expanded to include random polygraph tests for people who are permitted to see material classified only as "secret."

Under the proposal, even such relatively low-ranking military personnel as the Walkers might be subjected to random polygraph early on Oct. 11.

About 3.8 million people have access to classified information. About 2.6 million of them are military personnel or employees of the Defense Department, and 1.2 million are employees of civilian con-

By Howard Kurtz

Vashington Post Service WASHINGTON - A.U.S. district judge in New York has found that city officials in Yonkers, New York, maintained a segregated school system for more than three decades by refusing to build lowincome housing on the exclusive eastern side of town.

In a 600-page decision released Wednesday, Judge Leonard B. Sand said there was a causal relationship between segregated neigh-borhoods and segregated schools. He said that Yonkers officials are liable for the perpetuation of most-ly white and mostly black schools because they deliberately relegated

Just a Start in Guatemala

In Guatemala there is a keen appreciation of the power the military retains behind the civilians it has allowed to run for office. In the ranks of the Reagan administration, however, there is a marked tendency to see the elections there not only as fair in procedure but also as important ("the final step") in restoring civil-ian rule after three decades of dictatorship and repression. The elections are also being portrayed in Washington as proof of a swing to deinocracy that the United States has been effectively encouraging almost everywhere in Latin America and the Caribbean except in Nicaragua and, of course, Cuba.

Something can be said for reinforcing any turn for the better in a country that has seen as much grief as Guatemala. The valor of politicians such as Vinicio Cerezo and Jorge Carpio. who ran first and second in the election's first round on Nov. 3 (the second is on Dec. 8) and are not the military's pets, is exemplary. But Guatemala is not just the richest and most strategically important country in Central America. It is also the most feudal.

The generals did make a certain "democratic opening," at least in part to attract more international aid and respectability. But the tolerated parties cover only the center and right, in a popular spectrum that contains a powerful left. Great issues — land reform in a landlords' country, income distribution in a land of impoverished peasants, the accountability and methods of a military with a record of savagery --- were ruled out of bounds.

"For more than a hundred years we have suffered from regimes that have been at the service of feudal oligarchies but have utilized the language of freedom," Octavio Paz wrote in "The Labyrinth of Solitude." And "the situation has continued to our own day."

How the United States ought to engage with a rough place like Guatemala is a fair question. Staying at arm's length, as Washington has done for most of the last 10 years, averted taint from Guatemalan abuses but left the generals free to conduct a brutal internal policy. It also stoked Guatemalan pride and produced a disinclination - distressing to the Reagan administration - to cooperate with the United States on isolating Nicaragua.

Moving closer risks some of that taint, even in what everyone hopes are improved circumstances. But it also offers a chance for the Reagan administration, Congress, the human rights people and others to advise, press and nag in their respective fashions. The administration is ready to give it a try, but it needs to show it is not just winking at a farce in order to enlist Guatemala on the anti-Sandinist team.

Still Fleeing Indochina

Refugees are still fleeing Indochina, but concern for them and the rate of their resettlement has fallen sharply. Governments respond best when a calamity makes headlines, as when 500,000 bost people fled Vietnam in 1979. Permanent homes were found at the rate of about 25,000 a month. But 160,000 still live in temporary camps, and only about 5,000 a nonth are now being resettled.

The world needs a lobby for yesterday's dictims. What makes it harder for the most recent refugees from Indochina is that they are ess likely than their predecessors to have relaives elsewhere or the skills that host countries want. So they may languish for years in Hong Kong or Thailand — which cannot absorb them — as wards of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

But the totals are not indigestible. Since 1979 the United States has admitted 580,000 Indochinese refugees; by any fair reckoning, it has done its share. France, Canada and Australia have each absorbed more than 90,000. Meanwhile, West Germany has taken 23,000. Britain 19,000 and Japan 4,000. A world lobby for the victims could do worse than to askthese other countries to do better.

A Disreputable Verdict

It is the biggest corporate breach of promise wit on record. Pennzoil claimed that it had a ninding agreement to buy Getty Oil. The Gety directors had voted, there had been a handhake and a press release. The engagement, so o speak, had been announced. But marriage? That, as a certain type of novel puts it, was not o be. Texaco made an offer that the Getty lirectors decided they liked better, and they old their company to Texaco. Pennzoil sued n a Texas court. On Tuesday the jury awarded t $10.5 billion in actual and punitive damages.

This is an absurd verdict — the kind that is ringing the whole American tort system and ts wide-open verdicts into disrepute. It is also killer verdict, intended to put the defendant ut of business. The amount is a good deal arger than the total value of all of Texaco's tock and comes to three-quarters of the comany's net worth. The jury held that the actual lamages suffered by Pennzoil were $7.5 bilion. How that figure can be justified is unlear, since the total price for which Texaco xought Getty was $10.1 billion. No doubt Texaco can be accused of having alienated the iffections of Pennzoil's betrothed, but it is hard to see any very substantial commercial damages in the usual meaning of the term.

Addressing a Houston jury, Pennzoil's law-yer emphasized heavily that his client is a Houston company, while Texaco's headquarters are, notoriously, in suburban New York. Heartrending stuff. The unsuspecting local boy proceeds happily toward the wedding when along comes Mr. Moneybags from the city and snatches the girl from the altar.

No doubt the verdict will be reduced on appeal. No doubt a smaller figure - perhaps much smaller - will eventually be negotiated You can safely leave the rescue of Texaco to its well paid and highly motivated lawyers. But this case reaches interests far broader than those of these oil companies.

Has not something gone seriously wrong in a legal system when it develops the custom of spilling out, at random intervals, this kind of jackpot award unrelated to any real damages? Does not the rising threat of this kind of verdict put a severe burden on business in general and consequently on consumers? The learned to live with General Franco. Some still mourn, while others rejoice in his passing. But history has taken over from hagiography, and the unemotional way in which most Spaniards view his tomb, amid his Civil War comrades and the souvenir stalls in his own Valley of the Fallen, is a tribute to the healing powers of time. It is also a tribute to the good sense of those who have followed him, particularly King Juan Carlos, whose feeling for constitutional monarchy has been remarkable.

The real significance of EC entry must surely be that it confirms the country's rising status in the West. The government has a referendum on its membership of NATO to complicate its progress in the spring — and still has the terrorist threat from ETA. But ETA looks increasingly isolated, and as for the referendum — it is generally thought that Prime Minister Felipe González will win the affirmative vote he now wants.

A Summit's Success Depends on Follow-Through

By Philip Geyelin

WASHINGTON — By the time you read this, there will have been final summit statements and a torrent of inside insights from the instant historians. Yet not even the principals will be able to say with certainty what their Geneva exertions hold for the future of East-West relations or the chances for a safer world. This is not a put-down of what may have been gained. Quite possibly, Ronald Reagan may have charted with Mikhail Gorbachev the "new course" that was his professed objective. But ambiguities in official pronouncements are only the least of the reasons for waiting and seeing. Summit history is littered with subsequent misreadings of what was said or miscalculations of what was meant compounded by unexpected events.

Dwight Eisenhower's "Spirit of Geneva" in 1955 was blown away by the end of the year. Nikita Khru-shchev saw nothing in it to inhibit an arms sale to Egypt and a road show crusade through the Third World on behalf of international communism. Much has been made of Mr. Khrushchev's underestimation of John Kennedy in 1961. But a case can also be made that the Berlin wall and the shipment of missiles to Cuba may have owed at least as much to Mr. Khrushchev's own insecurity. Conventional wisdom has it that the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan killed U.S. Senate ratification of the American public opinion. You would SALT-2 treaty. But the trouble started, old Carter hands insist, with a still inexplicable flap over the "discovery" of a "Soviet brigade" in Cuba in ery" of a "Soviet brigade" in Cuba in late 1979 — a brigade that the United States knew about (and that the Soviets knew it knew about) because the unit had been there for at least 17 years. The consequent uproar in the United States persuaded the Carter administration to put off the push for the following year — by which time Afghanistan had intervened.

Thus does the effect of untoward events on internal politics have a way of forcing the hand of American and Soviet leaders, whatever commitments they make or whatever intentions they convey to each other faceto-face. This is all the more the case when you consider the current condition of the still unsettled Gorbachev regime and the old but astonishingly

Senate ratification of SALT-2 until unsettled Reagan administration. General Secretary Gorbachev has surprised Kremlin-watchers by how swiftly he has moved to take charge. But his capacity to carry through with bold changes is still threatened by a well entrenched old gnard. A stern test of his performance awaits him at a party congress in February. President Reagan is sky-high with suppose him to be strong enough to work his will in whatever way he thinks would best advance the "fresh start" he was seeking at Geneva. Yet it is hard to ignore the real message of the "leak" last weekend of Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger's letter to his old friend, the president.

The contents, as Secretary of State George Shultz noted, were unexceptional; as he put it, "Cap's" reserva tions on arms control were well and widely known. But an anonymous White House official saw it instantly as an effort to "sabotage the summit." So the leaking of the letter says something about the low level of dis-cipline and the high level of disloyal-ty in the Reagan government.

And the writing of it (not to mention its circulation with no security classification to State, the CIA, the Arms Control Agency and within the Pentagon) says even more. Mr. Weinberger might as well have posted it on the newsroom bulletin board.

The lesson for post-summit U.S. policy-making is clear. Well into the administration's second term, the struggle for the heart and mind of Ronald Reagan rages on. This is in large part because the president him-self is not given to resolving contra-dictions. He would be the man of peace, setting out to reshape U.S.-Soviet relations for the rest of the century and beyond. But Mr. Weinberger knows the president's mind too well to put into a letter so loosely handled anything he thought the president did not want to hear.

Some say it does not matter because Mr. Weinberger's influence is on the wane. He did not go to Geneva. But his key man for arms control, Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Perle, was on hand and will presumably be back at his old Pentagon stand, acting with consummate skill in the spirit he outlined early this year to The Washington Post.

The sense that we and the Russians could compose our differences, reduce them to treaty restraints, enter into agreements, treaties ... and then rely on [Soviet] compliance to produce a safer world —I don't agree with any of that," Mr. Perle said. And the Weinberger letter is vintage Perle. The point here is that positiontaking in preparation for getting-to-know-you summits, at which public perceptions count for as much as substantive give and take, is not the same as policy-making. That is why sum-mit undertakings are fragile, subject to stress cracks and metal fatigue. Their enduring value depends entirely on the care that goes into their ance - by both sides.

In Ulster A Summit Paid Off

By Mary McGrory

WASHINGTON — The news of 2 successful summit in Ulster was swamped in the flood of blather from the other summit, in Geneva.

That was too bad for several reasons. First, the two prime ministers, Margaret Thatcher and Garrett Fitz-Gerald, brought out of a castle at Hillsborough, near Belfast, an agreement promising modest but agmit-cant progress in a 60-year-old problean that has been a synonym for stalemate. Second, Hillsborough on Nov. 15 was a kind of model summit. illustrating the virtues of preparation. discretion and a clear agenda.

Eighteen months of intense work. went into it: In addition to two full summits between the principals there were four informal meetings at European Community, six ministerial meetings and 35 at lower levels. For a full year the New Ireland Forum took volumes of testimony from all plaintiffs, north and south.

Mrs. Thatcher and Mr. FitzGerald have known each other for 10 years. They approach the issue of Northern Ireland, as Mr. FitzGerald said at their joint news conference, "from wholly different historical perspec-tives and title deeds."

Cole

But they always got along, maybe because they have both been teachers and share intellectual curiosity. Besides, they were often thrown together at European meetings, where Mr. FitzGerald, a most obliging and civilized man, sometimes served as her interpreter, since Mrs. Thatcher knows only English and he speaks most of the languages of Europe.

"The chemistry was good, even when the meetings didn't turn out so well," said Sean Donlon, a former Irish ambassador to the United States and now the senior civil servant at the Department of Foreign Affairs. He was referring to the dark moment when, after the November 1984 conference, Mrs. Thatcher brusquely dismissed each possibility for better relations as "not on." Mrs. Thatcher and Mr. FitzGerald had to put aside a great deal more than Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev. Despite a history of al-most hysterical hostility between the United States and the Soviet Union, the Soviets and the Americans have never gone to war. To talk rationally about Ireland and England, each representative must put aside the memory of rivers of blood. But Mrs. Thatcher and Mr. Fitz-Gerald managed it. Her personal ex-perience of the Irish problem had been brutal. In March 1979 her friend Aircy Neave was murdered; in October 1984 she escaped the bombing of a Brighton hotel. She showed great comage and magnanimity in going to Ireland for the signing Mrs. Thatcher's motivation is similar to that ascribed to Mr. Reagan: the desire to go down in history as a peacemaker. A solution to the Irish problem has evaded all her predecessors. It is no achievement she covets. Mr. FitzGerald was born wanting reconciliation: His mother was a northern Protestant, his father a outhern Catholic

Their agenda was neither crowded nor in dispute. They had no spurious photo opportunities, no spouses' teas. They wanted to give the Republic a say in Ulster's affairs, to improve relations between the Ulster security forces and the northern Catholic minority. They did not talk about exchanging Erse scholars. They estab-lished a joint conference to ensure cooperation on political, security and legal matters. They promised that there would be no change in Northem Ireland's status without majority consent. They rehearsed their postsummit statements so that no nunecessary offense would be given.

The reaction was as expected. Ian Paisley, the Protestant demagogne, howled betrayal; the Northern Ireland Assembly denounced the ac-cord; the Thatcher government's secretary for Northern Ireland, Tom King was roughed up by anti-Dublin demonstrators when he visited Belfast City Hall. Mr. Paisley promised to keep resistance within constitu-tional limits. He proposed that Irish members of the British Parliament resign, forcing a referendum of sorts. If re-elected, they would resign again. The leader of Mr. FitzGerald's opposition, Charles Haughey, has complained that the agreement "recog-nizes the legitimacy of unionism."

U.S. support was instantly assured. President Reagan and the speaker of the House, Tip O'Neill, jointly promised aid to a peaceful Ulster. It was all in admirable contrast to the hyper-activism in Geneva, where two total strangers met amid a mob of reporters at the superpower Olym-pics — "ns against them." Washington Post Writers Group.

A Curious Appraisal of Investment Risk in Europe

PARIS — In a recent poll by Business International, the New York-based analysts, 106 senior financial executives of major multinational corporations judged Italy and France to be high-risk countries for investment. Britain was held to be low in risk, and the United States even lower. A quarter of these executives said that they were consolidating their companies' investts into the United States, and cutt eliminating overseas commitments. Another 20 percent said that they planned to do so.

It would be interesting to know the reasoning behind these judgments, although they reflect a certain conventional wisdom. But even in terms of the conventional wisdom it seems odd to say that France is a risky place, when the conservative parties are about to return to power. It might have seemed risky in 1981, when the Socialists took over — although it was not: The French markets prospered after 1981. Why is Britain considered a better risk than Italy, when, as Lord Stockton, the former Sir Harold Macmillan, has recently reminded his countrymen, without its North Sea oil income Britain risks national bankruptcy?

Why is Italy a risky place? For 40 years the country has been dominated by the same party, the Christian Democrats, either alone or as the principal force in moderate coalitions, following essentially the same conservative, business-oriented, growth-directed economic policies. One crisis after another has been mastered in Italy: the oil shock, industrial readaptation, union accommodation to the decline of heavy industry, restoration of competitiveness through innovation and design leadership, successful resistance to terrorism. might be a military coup d'état.

A generals' coup in the United States? To an American the idea is preposterous. But an American must consider how America can be seen from abroad. Here is a country where assassination attempts have been made against four of the last seven presidents — one successfully, another nearly so. A recent president was driven from office by demonstrations in the streets against an unpopular war, and another for malfeasance and the use of police power against his political opponents. There has been terrorism and racial violence. The level of insecurity in the nation's cities has no parallel in the Western world.

The country has been at war for 12 of the last 35 years. It has invaded four Latin American or Caribbean countries since 1950, and it now seems close to invading another. It is more than $2 trillion dollars in debt, and yet its Senate, in what to the foreigner might seem a surrealist gesture, has just acted to mandate a balanced budget. President Reagan, whose own administration has been running $200-billion dollar anmual deficits, welcomes this initiative.

The economy relies on military spending, Real wages have been falling since 1973, family income diminishing, living standards declining. Industrial profit rates are half what they were 20 years ago, and interest rates are at historic highs. The currency, because it is the currency in which international debts are settled, no longer reflects the realities of the economy. Trade, except for aircraft and a limited number of other high-technology products, resembles that of the Third World, exporting farm produce and raw materials and importing a much larger value of consumer and military electronics, antomobiles of a sophistication unavailable from American manufacturers, machine tools and robots, luxury goods. Protectionism is on the rise. What sensible investor should want his money in a country with so unsound an economy, governed so irresponsibly, so given to violence, political assassination and crime, its future so compromised by public and private debt? But of course they do. They do because what I have said is only part of the story.

It is, nonetheless, for both Italy and the United States, a neglected part of the story. The United States is rich and stable. Its riches, though, are compromised, and its stability is relative. The unstable governments in Italy regularly fall. The consistency of Italian political and economic policy over the 40 postwar years nonetheless rivals that of Switzerland.

He says that he has been advised by the U.S. Navy Department that his invention has lived up to its claims, and that he has been offered a post in the department's experimental laboratory at Lakehurst, New Jersey. Anderson says that the Americans are more interested in his invention as a weapon. It is stated that with the ray glass tumblers had been reduced to powder from a distance of ten to twelve feet, electric bulbs destroyed, motor-car ignition systems made to fail, and wireless sets made inoperative by directing the ray at the aerial. Anderson adds that, besides destroying aircraft, the ray could be used to make electric power lines useless.

ERUSALEM - Last week's cabinet crisis is over - for the time being. On the surface it can look like a four-day wonder. On Monday the minister of commerce and industry, Ariel Sharon, made a bitter personal attack on Prime Minister Shimon Peres and his policies. By Wednesday the normally conciliatory Mr. Peres was demanding an apology or Mr. Sharon's resignation. By late Thursday the prime minister had received a letter of "clarification" that satisfied him and allowed Mr. Sharon to remain in the government.

the current maneuvering, a bit more than a year after formation of the national unity government, things are seldom what they seem, indeed, there is reason to wonder if the confrontation was not a well staged dress rehearsal by two seasoned political showmen who share a common goal.

Mr. Peres is clearly intent on breaking up the national unity government before next fall, when Likud's Yitzhak Shamir is scheduled to replace him as prime minister. But Mr. Peres, who for years has suffered from a "Tricky Shimon" image, needed a good reason - and now he has one in store. In accepting Mr. Sharon's halfhearted apology, he went on record to the effect that any repetition of last week's verbal assault will lead to Mr. Sharon's immediate dismissal. Such a dismissal, Mr. Peres well knows, would force Likud to leave the government.

But in be off and Mr. Sharon will almost certainly challenge Mr. Shamir. So the Peres ultimatum has effectively given Mr. Sharon the initiative. It allows him to bring down the government when it suits him.

Probably nothing would delight Mr. Peres more than a Likud led by Mr. Sharon. No former general has ever been elected prime minister (Yitzhak Rabin was chosen to replace Golda Meir by a Labor Party convention), and Israeli voters have traditionally spurned flamboyant military types like Moshe Dayan, Ezer Weizman and Mr. Sharon himself, who received less than 2 percent of the vote when he ran at the head of his own ticket in 1977. Given Mr. Sharon's controversial record, abrasive personality and overbearing style, he would make an inviting target for Mr. Peres in any future election.

General Bueso, 48, left Santiago on Tuesday to face U.S. charges against him in Miami. At a hearing Wednesday before U.S. Magistrate Samuel Smargon, he was ordered held on $50,000 bond. If convicted, prison and a $20,000 fine.

M-1 Jumps $1.5 Billion

The Associated Press NEW YORK - The narrowest measure of the U.S. money supply, M-1, rose $1.5 billion in the week ended Nov. 11, the Federal Reserve Board reported Thursday. The increase was within expectations.

The Fed said M-1, which includes cash in circulation, deposits in checking accounts and nonbank travelers checks, increased to a sea-sonally adjusted $613.6 billion from a revised $612.1 billion the previous week.

"A steady flow of money coming out of shortterm money market deposits and into stocks is triggering the move," he said. Aaron Copland: Like a Song-Filled Rock of Gibraltar

Aaron Copland's 85th birthday is being celebrated throughout the U.S. musical world. Ned Rorem, composer and essayist, wrote this appreciation for The New York Times.

by Ned Rorem

S a teen-ager at Philadelphia's very proper Curtis Institute in 1943 I would occasionally head for New York to get into mischief. One weekend, before boarding the train (I was off to see Virgil Thomson, whom Pd never met, about becoming his copyist) a schoolmate, Shirley Gabis, said, "Why not drop in on my old friend Lenny while you're up there." I did. Accordingly Bernstein put me onto Copland — "Aaron likes knowing what young composers are up to" — and I spent an afternoon bleating my tunes for the famous musician. Well, I took the job with Virgil, became an instant fan of Aaron and Lenny, and for the next 42 years with many an up and a down I've remained staunch friends 42 years with many an up and a down I've remained staunch friends with all three men. Some weekend!

In the early postwar years, although Bernstein was yet to become the versifier the world would worship, Copland and Thomson were already the Rome and Avignon of American music. Young compositions already the Rome and Avignon of American music. Young composers joined one faction or the other, there was no third, Both were from France through Nadia Boulanger, but Aaron's camp was Stravinsky-French and contained a now-vanished breed of neoclassicist like Alexei Haieff and Harold Shapero, while Virgil's branch was Satie-French and contained a still vital breed like John Canand Low Harrison (The Canand as Still vital breed like John Canand Low Harrison (The Canand as Still vital breed like John Canand Low Harrison (The Canand as Still vital breed like John Canand Low Harrison (The Canand as Still vital breed like John Canand Low Harrison (The Canand Low Harrison (The Canada as Still vital breed like John Cage and Lou Harrison. (The Germanisms of Wolpe-via-Schoenberg were as yet quiescent.) The few lone wolves such as myself were still socially partial to one or the other. If I saw a good deal less of Aaron than of Virgil it's because the latter was my employer.

Meanwhile, there has built up around Copland bits of conventional wisdom that bear inspection. On a recent TV homage I found myself stating, as by rote, that Copland had invented out of whole cloth what it means to be American. Now, wasn't it Thomson who first legitimized the use of homegrown fodder for sophisticated palates, a use Copland borrowed intact for his "second period"—the period of open prairies and Appalachian springs? What's more, hadn't Thomson, like Poulenc, invented his own folk music (you won't find his church-tune pastiches and cowboy ditties in hymnas and combact, while Coulend his Straights, incompared and and songbags), while Copland, like Stravinsky, incorporated pre-existing lore into his scores? Certainly Copland was out to find the American Way, but whether the Brooklynite would have chosen just this way without the Missourian Thomson's pioneering is specula-

As to the "periods," they can now be viewed as mere textbook labels after the fact. Copland's ocuvre is history: Each work, from the once "problematic" Piano Variations through the "lean" "Rodeo" to the thorny "Inscape," can now be heard as flowing from the same economical pen. His music, all of it, is accessible to the big public, with (this is his crucial inheritance from Boulanger) never a

On the same TV program we learned, again through the iteration of received ideas, that Aaron is a saint. The broad acceptance of his sanctity stems less, I think, from his stordy need for self promotion (which all artists possess) than from his fanatic sense of the value of other people's work (which few artists possess). Even in private Aaron is a public person, enjoying gossip but not uttering it, witty and generous, yes, but also stoic and immutable. Yet to be a saint one must have been a sinner, and it lessens the man to assume he is above

I have observed Aaron livid with impatience at the longueurs in a French peer's sonata, heard him sigh from betrayed affection, submitted to his ire about what I'd written about a friend of his, known him to be more than tempted by the flesh. Bland sms, I admit. But then, Aaron is more artist than saint. Saints are a dime a dozen, but true art is scarce, and one could argue that Aaron Copland has changed the world for the better while Joan of Arc never changed it

Recently, I told the composer George Perle that Copland has branded us all in America, even those who repudiate him, since regulation is acknowledgement of Copland's force. I've said this so often it's dogma, so was disconcerted when George replied, "He never influenced me. In fact, I've influenced him. After all, he finally came over to the serial technique, while I never went over to his side. Indeed, Copland did "come over" to the 12-tone system during his so-called "third" period. Retrospectively, this seems an act of hysteria, of not wanting to be left behind. In the '60s, Copland had the world at his feet except for that small portion older composers most ng composers. The young at that moment were immerse: in Bouleziana, a mode quite foreign to Copland's very nature (as to the nature of Stravinsky, who also sold out to the system).

The more things change the more they stay the same. Today I teach at Curtis. Lenny's an esteemed poet. Virgil thrives. And Aaron is again loved by the young, though less as model than as a fact of sonic geology, like a throbbing, song-filled rock of Gibraltar.

How Inner Torment Feeds The Spirit of Creativity

by Samuel G. Freedman

EW YORK - At Diane Arbus's funeral, the photographer Richard Avedon turned to a friend and whispered, "Oh, I wish I could be an artist like Diane." The friend, Frederick Eberstadt, answered, "Oh, no, you don't." Their brief exchange — as reconnted in Patricia Bosworth's biography of Arbus raises the charged questions surrounding the tormented, even self-destructive, creative artist. Chief among them is where reality ends and mythology begins.

Arbus personified the artist whose inner turmoil — depression, dislocation and a taste for risk bordering on a death wish fueled her creations, those moving and disturbing photographs of drag queens and hermaphrodites, celebrities and Siamese twins. But Arbus was also a woman defeated by depressions so debilitating she often could not work and, ultimately, chose not to live. Finally, Arbus represented an artist who gained more fame, who was indeed romanticized, more for living on the edge than for the artistry she brought back from that emotional frontier.

It is no wonder, then, that Arbus — that the entire issue of the "mad artist," as the awful cliché has it — should both attract and repel, as it has for literally thousands of years. Aristotle spoke of "divine madness," the Renaissance scholar Marsilio Ficino of the "Saturnine temperament." The playwright August Strindberg declared that few people were 'lucky enough to be capable of madness," and the poet John Berryman opined, "The artist is extremely lucky who is presented with the worst possible ordeal which will not nearly kill him."

For both creators and scientists, the subject is an extraordinarily loaded one - even more so now, when popular culture so glorifies violent and bizarre behavior. The American artistic landscape is littered with the corpses of the brilliant, from painter Mark Rothko to poet Anne Sexton to musician Charlie Parker, and one must wonder if they died in part because sycophants with safer lives so celebrated their excesses. For contemporary artists like the jazz musician Jacke McLean and the writer Raymond Carver true creativity began only after conquering their respective addictions to heroin and alcohol. To them, and many other creators, the image of the self-destructive artist not only invites futility or death but denies the value of disciplined craft.

HERE is no question that many creative artists, perhaps the vast majority, are centered and sane. There may be just as many self-destructive bakers as painters, but psychiatrists and biographers do not analyze their cakes. It is the tormented artist and not the untroubled one - the Vincent van Gogh, not the Peter Paul Rubens - who provides the stuff of tabloid

But if that image is inflated, neither is it groundless. For many artists, creation is a constant act of balancing the dark side that allows introspection with the brighter one that turns raw material into finished product. One result of the process, "The Iceman Cometh" by Eugene O'Neill, is now playing at the Lunt-Fontanne. The play, set in a saloon ironically called Harry Hope's, closely parallels O'Neill's years of uncontrollable drinking in dives like Jimmy-the-Priest's and the Hell Hole. It is impossible to imagine O'Neill having written the play without be-coming the virtual ascetic he did; yet it is equally impossible to imagine him writing as rendingly about self-destruction and self-delusion without having lived both.

O'Neill's life and work raise some of the most frightening — and central — questions about creativity. Can the forces that make you creative also kill you? Can you live with control and yet create free of restraint? Can you live enough of the dark side to tell the tale without becoming a casualty? The equilibrium is precarious. As the playwright Arthur Miller wrote of Strindberg: "Strindberg not only suffered what by most definitions would be madness, but managed it like a conductor managing an orchestra. It makes his suffering no less real and painful to say that it was always being turned over and over by the bloody fingers of his mind."

In Sam Shepard's work that tension is frequently embodied by pairs of brothers — Lee and Austin in the play "True West," Travis and Walt in the film "Paris, Texas." These characters represent the polarity in the playwright himself. "Somewhere there's a myth about the wolf and the sheep," Shepard said, "and man carries both inside him. And the process of keeping alive is trying to have these two cohabit, trying to carry on a balance between these two parts, because one's always trying to devour the other. And the one that wants to devour — the wolf — is the animalistic one, the one that operates on impulse and is pretty insane.

There's definitely a struggle going on. and it's answered in different ways. Some people do it with drinking or drugs. The difficulty is trying to accept that this is the condition you're living with, the condition of these two parts banging up against each other, and the constant threat of being overthrown by one." Like Shepard, the film director Martin Scorsese has consistently made art that derives from, and in turn reflects, his own turbulence. The emotional palette of Scorsese's surrogates ranges from the paranoia of Paul Hackett in his current "After Hours" to the volcanic violence of Travis Bickle in "Taxi Driver." Perhaps the most clearly autobiographical statement is Jimmy Doyle, the saxophonist portrayed by Robert DeNiro in "New York, New York." Doyle is a singular musician and an impassioned lover; he also is a brutal predator, jealous of his wife's success as a singer, quick to damage those nearest him.

"Jimmy Doyle was very much a picture of myself and DeNiro at that time." Scorsese said. "We recognized that contrariness and difficulty, and we improvised on it. Because out of that does come the work, does come the art. The trick is, how much does it get to you? New York, New York was not a complete success because the wolf took over. 'Raging Bull' was a better mix of vis-ceral stuff and form.

"There's a creative urge that gets inside you, like 'Alien.' For me, it's a constant; battle of deciding when not to explode, when to use that emotion to feed you creatively. There's a constant fear, because you're push-it thereafter that they don't trouble to see it or to read the plays they never did at school." "It" became alive for her - and will, she "It" became airve for her — and will, she hopes for thousands of others — when she saw an artist working, while publishers jeered, on a comic book version of "Macbeth." She has since published not only "Macbeth" but also "Othello," "King Lear" and "Twelfth Night" in comic book form.

Most people recoil at the thought. "When people at parties say what do you do and I say publish Shakespeare in comic strips, I can see their faces freezing. And I think, gosh I wish I had a copy here so I could say no, it isn't as you think it is, it isn't 'Desperate Dan.'

The art work and printing are of high quality and unlike the American comic strip Tauté once saw in which Lady Macbeth said, "Hey Mac, have you killed the king yet?" she nses the complete first folio version and with "Twelfth Night" provided a five-page glossary so readers would get the jokes.

Admittedly, her Viola in "Twelfth Night" looks like David Bowie and her Lear has been described as at times resembling Ray.

mond Chandler's Philip Marlowe and at other times a very cross posched egg. But stage directors are equally free in their interpretations and people rarely fuss.

Anne Taute, on the other hand, has been dressed down by booksellers and has found British schoolteachers perfect Peg-a-Ramseys, or killjoys according to the "Twelfth Night" glossary.
"I do understand that if the texts are available for one pound, they cannot ask for funds to justify a copy at five pounds, which is what ours cost, but you would think they would pay for it out of their own pocket because it would make the lessons. Imagine coming in and saying, look at this, you lot. You're not going to be bored rigid any-

She has had better acceptance at higher levels. The bookshops of both the National Theatre and the Royal Shakespeare Compain a package with their cassettes of "Othello" and "King Lear," starring Pani Scofield and Alec Guinness respectively.

In France the comic book is an accepted art form, in the United States it is mostly for dimwits and kids. In England the long tradi-tion of excellent book illustration makes a picture with one line under it acceptable, but a page divided into nine frames with people speaking in balloons suspect.

Now in her ebullient mid-'30s, Anne Tanté well remembers schoolday bouts with Shakespeare. Most people, she says, study only four plays out of the 36 during their school years. Despite her intense work on the comic books - and it takes about two years to produce each one - she says, "I actually sidle out of a conversation that mentions it."

The sophisticated cartooning techniques

she uses are intended for adults who wish to brush up their Shakespeare, but she has been surprised by children's squeals of delight.

"King Lear' is the most favorite of chil-dren because it's all distorted and I think it reminds them of teddy bears that have one ear falling off and one eye popped out. They love it, they want to cuddle it and go to bed with it. So when they go to school and someone says now we're going to do Shake-speare, they have a perfectly open mind and aren't scared."

Older children have also reacted well. "We've been doing tests in down-and-out areas of London where the kids are basically switched on only to pop music and glue. We took thirty copies in the other day of 'Mac-beth' and when we came to collect them at the end of the class, half of them were missing. I thought that was lovely." She got into comics when she saw drawings by a Brazilian-born artist named Von that everyone thought had no future. "I said to the other publishers all you do is regurgi-tate the same old material — the same books on flowers and cookery and sport and romance. Why don't you take on an exciting project like that? They said, why don't you?" So she quit her own publishing job and founded Oval Projects Ltd. (the office is near the Oval cricket ground) with her father, who mortgaged the family house, as co-director. "He's a designer and architect which means we think line and design and color and talk about artists all day long. And I Continued on page 11

Munich's Gasteig Center: Getting the Culture, If Not The Cars, Under One Roof

by Albrecht Roeseler

UNICH - It is somewhat strange that Munich, though often praised as the focus of cultural activities in West Germany, has waited for over 40 years since the last war to establish a new big concert hall. Last week, with the official blessings of the federal president, who flew down to the Bavarian capital for the occasion, the new Gasteig Kulturzentrum, a huge multipur-pose brick-and-concrete complex with several concert and lecture halls, a public library, a music school and futher educational facilities, opened its doors. Radio and television covered the opening ceremonies nationwide.

The need to house the Munich Philharmonic Orchestra in a new concert hall, though evident for decades, had been ne-glected for a long time, and the provisional halls, the Herkulessaal in the former royal Residenz complex as well as the ugly Congress Hall of the Technical Museum, proved to be more durable than expected. Thus, the Bavarian capital had much time to consult other big cities on how they had managed to reorganize their musical life after most buildings had been bombed during the war.

Hamburg and Vienna, where luckily the concert halls had survived the end of the war, could carry on as before. Other cities started (rather late, in fact) remodeling the inside of partly destroyed buildings but took care to preserve their famous facades: Schinkel's former Schauspielhaus (East Berlin) and the Alte Oper in Frankfurt were turned into concert hails. But there are also completely new buildings to be found: the Stuttgart Liederhalle (completed in the '50s) and the surprisingly modern Leipzig Gewandhaus, fine examples only surpassed by West Ber-lin's spectacular Philharmonie, which is regarded among international music connoisseurs as one of the finest concert halls of modern times. Built at the edge of the Tiergarten and since 1961 in close proximity to the infamous Berlin Wall, it has nevertheless become the focus of music life in the divided city.

The Munich people wanted more than that. This has been a problem closely connected with the idea of how German municiples. palities decided to spend their taxpayers' money on cultural activities. For a long time it was the dominating idea to spare no possi-ble effort to make even elite culture more easily accessible to the man in the street, that is, to offer visual and performing arts of diverse nature under one roof. There had been spectacular examples abroad; when Munich's city fathers made up their minds to create a "grand multimedia cultural center plus facilities for adult education," New Yorkers had already experienced their brand new Lincoln Center — a large forum which assembled representative institutions for the performing arts, the famous Juilliard School and many other art buildings. Though not strikingly modern but rather moderately classical, it has proved to function properly ever since and was accepted by the public almost immediately.

Whenever the architectural structure of new cultural centers became subject to criticism it seemed more understandable in other. cities, such as in Paris when the merry, cubical Centre Pompidou opened and, years later in London, the Barbican Center. But despite all aesthetic grumblings the people gladly and swiftly accepted the new offerings, thus justifying the general idea of assembling culture under one roof."

N Munich, there were a lot of pros and cons when it came to raising enough money to finance the projected Kultur-Monster. And as soon as the decision was final to go ahead with this new Gasteig forum with numerous halls (seating capacities from 150 up to 2,400 for the big Philharmonic Hall) plus library and various educational institutions, it suddenly became a popular political idea to promote subsidized culture in a more decentralized form: "district culture," street theater and so-called socio-cultural activities."

While the monstrous Gasteig center grew bigger and bigger (resulting in the city's decision to have the project handled by a leasing company to whom they now will have to pay rates and interest for a total sum of over 330 million Deutsche marks, or about $126 million) the city administration, willy-nilly, had to fulfill promises made during the rule of the Christian Democrats: to install more and more "hardware" for cul-

Resurgence in Rio de Janeiro

by Marlise Simons

IO DE JANEIRO — On a first visit to Rio de Janeiro, you wonder how you could have missed out on it until then. The next time, you immediately remember why you swore to return. It has ease and style and grandeur.

Built against odds, on narrow strips of land, rolling over landfills and patched onto the mountainsides, this bustling city is a monument to human persistence. When a stretch of it is left alone, the vines and rubber plants, the hummingbirds and lizards, quickly take it back. The forces of gravity pull extra hard on weekends, when half the city seems to descend from the hillsides, travel down elevators and stairways and end up prostrate, prancing or playing down below, along miles of beach.

Now that two decades of dour military rule have ended, Brazil is experiencing a surge of cultural expression. Brazil's artists, writers and musicians have always been drawn by Rio's merger of play, work and physical beauty, so their output is concentrated here. The theater season has never been busier. There is a rush of new books. concerts and art shows. Cafes offer folk music and poetry readings. The last week of this month, Rio will be host to its second International Film Festival. In São Paulo, the Biannual Art Show will be open until Dec. 15. It is a giant fair, exhibiting about 2,400 paintings, sculptures and photographs from 46 countries.

There are places that ought to be approached in the manner of the explorers of old, after a long voyage at sea. Rio is one of them. In the distance, giant rocks rise from the shore and, like magnets, draw one in. The curving green and yellow coastline juts out toward the traveler, then bends away again.

The French, showing a knack for presents that last, gave New York its Stame of Liberty and Rio its statue of Christ. It has stunned people ever since. To see it close up, one makes the climb by car or funicular through a tropical forest to the top of Corcovado (Hunchback) peak, 2,310 feet (703 meters) above the city. There is nothing for an en-core, not even the cable car to Pão de Açûcar (Sugar Loaf) mountain.

On the ground, there are pockets of old Rio where narrow streets, churches and monasteries have held ont against the bulldozers. Some are close to the Praça 15 de Novembro. Here a fine 18th-century royal palace, used in modern times by the postal and telegraph department, has just been restored and reopened as a cultural center.

The one museum not to miss is the National Museum in the Quinta da Boa Vista Park at São Cristóvão (open Tuesday through Sunday, 10 to 5). Admission is the equivalent of 10 U.S. cents. Its collection is jumbled but wondrous and includes one of the world's largest meteorites, an unusual Egyptian mummy with its arms not tucked in and a range of pre-Columbian pottery and Indian finery. (Brazilian museums do not the air force base, is open Tuesday to Friday 9 to 4, Saturday and Sunday 10 to 5. Admission is free, and a guided tour in English can be arranged, free, for four or more, by calling 359-8880 two days in advance. Among flying machines of many types and ages are the earliest planes, built by the Brazilian avia-tion pioneer Alberto Santos-Dumont. His Demoiselle is here too, a graceful creature with bicycle wheels, a bamboo frame and silk wings.

HIS is a city of stylish cotton and linen clothes and leather shoes and handbags, all cheaper than you can get at home. Boutiques are scattered through two modern shopping malls, Rio Sul and Sao Conrado, and along Visconde de Piraja Street Krishna and Chocolate have especially nice linen dresses, tops and suits. Krishna has suits for $150 and dress and blazer combinations for $200. Beach and leisure wear is mousse of watercress, cavaquinha (a small inexpensive and saucy.

Brazilians are accomplished jewelry makers. Aside from the traditional gemstones, they produce piles of costume jewelry: some cautious, some imaginative and some outrageous. A necklace might cost $15; an imitation ivory bracelet perhaps $10 to $15.

Interest on the part of foreigners seems to have helped validate handcrafts again. Several new stores have opened, with a great variety of pieces from all over the country.

Offerings include fine lace, woodcarvings, pottery, hammocks, Indian artifacts, feather and basket work, fiber tapestry, pewter and leather goods. Representative stores include O Sol, 213 Corcovado Street, and Mãos de Fada, 476 Visconde de Pirajá Street Zuhause, a bit pricier, has outlets in Inanema's Design Center and in Copacabana at 303 and 458 Barata Ribeiro Street.

For an authentic, popular market, see the Fair of the Northeast on Campo de São Cristovão, Sunday mornings.

Beware of the wooden antique saints.

They are ubiquitous, often charming, usually carved just the other day and deserving of no more than the price of a contemporary piece.

Rio's pickpockets are among the world's nimblest. Passport, money, checks and jew-elry are best left in the hotel safe (and never taken to the beach). Cash carried for shopping should be kept to a bare minimum. Taxis are cheap: There is no need or wisdom in riding a bus.

The sight of this voluptuous place and its people happily flaunting their bodies, their glowing skin and their loud makeup, often sends newcomers scrambling for a quick body treatment themselves.

Massages, facials, hairstyling, manicures and pedicures for both sexes are so inexpensive you might as well do it all. Salons are plentiful, in the hotels or the commercial

HE choice of fine restaurants is rapidly growing in this city that long swore by a heavy fare of codfish dishared a heavy fare of codfish dishes and feijoada, the national stew of black beans, dried meat, sausages and pork. Such meals traditionally ended in deeply sweet desserts and sleep. Now lighter concoctions are available, based on the year-round abundance of fresh fruits, greens and fish. Dishes like tasty lobster) and the tangy maracusa (passion fruit tart) are now appearing on more and more means. Eating out is relatively cheap, and people like to stan after 9 P.M.

Some of the best seafood is served in the Mediterrâneo ou Ipanema's Prodente de Morais Street (259-4696) and the Grottamare on Gomes Cameiro Street in Copaca-bana (227-3186). The Albamar, once the port's fish market is off Praça 15 de Novembro (240-8378). At hunch it offers a grand is view of Guanabara Bay. A three-course meal for two without wine at Grottamare, $25; Mediterráneo, $30; Albamar, $23. Fegorda and other Brazilian specialties are served at Chale on Matriz Street (286-0897). Also typically Brazilian are the ubiqutious churascarias, informal, inexpensive halls where you often can eat as much meat as you want for a flat price. Waiters pick giant spits from the open-pit barbecue and carve the meat directly onto your plate. Good choices are Marin's on Atlantic Ave. nue (542-2393) in Copacabana and Plata-forma on Adalberto Ferreira Street (274 4022). Mariu's, $25; Plataforma, $21.

In Copacabana and Ipanema you are in ... the midst of things near beach, shops and restaurants. Most of Rio's top hotels are ... along these famous shores, but it's worth remembering that these hotels are separated : from the beach by broad avenues and therefore amid a great traffic dm. Do ask for a room at the top. Paces listed are for two. 4 breakfast included.

Modern hotels include the Meridien (275-9922, $114) and the Othon Palace (235-7292, $119) in Copacabana and the Caesar Park (287-3122, $140) and Praia Ipanema (239-9932, $79) in Ipanema.

For a less urban setting, the Sheraton, on Leblon (274-1122, $125). Old-timers often favor one of the three aging classics: the Copacabana Palace (257-1818, $107), an elegant seafront spa with high ceilings, small — beds and a kitchen with less appeal than the hotel's architecture; the Ouro Verde (542- 4 1887, $88), just a few blocks away, with a fine restaurant (about $35), liked by businessmen, and the Hotel Gioria, overlooking Guanabara Bay (205-7272,$54).

*No-Shows and Bumping

by Roger Collis

S every seasoned traveler knows, "bumping," or "involuntary boarding denial" in airline jargon. is what happens when you are refused a seat on a plane for which you have an O.K." a confirmed reservation. It's an issue that airlines prefer to consign to the small print. Few people get excited about it unless thay have actually been bumped. The horror stories may seem apocryphal.

North American carriers, conditionally the conditional state of the conditional state of the conditional state. arrine. North American carriers, conditioned by relatively strict rules in the United States, are mostly good, while those in Africa and Eastern Europe are mostly bad. There's a growing awareness in Europe; airlines like British Airways and KLM are pioneering ways of asking for volunteers to accept cash connection, while others haven with imcompensation, while others bump with im-punity. The chances of being bumped obviously vary according to the time of the flight as well as the airline. Overall, in the United States, the number of passengers bumped by the 12 major carriers was 6.39 per 10,000 in the first three months of 1985 compared with 5.52 during the same period last ways. This means that at Heathrow in London, the world's busiest international airport, an average of between 50 and 100 passengers may be humoed by the 70 airlines passengers may be bumped by the 70 airlines operating there.

Although airlines are allowed, under existing sules of the International Air Transport Association, to impose a penalty for honoring a ticket that shows an uncanceled reservation for a previous flight, it's highly unlikely that any would do so in today's competitive climate. That is why multiple booking, spread among several airlines, is hard to detect. More sensible is the AEA campaign, which indicates that if you are a no-show for the outward leg of a trip, you may risk having onward and return flights canceled, although Juksel admits that this is more of a scare than a threat. . In the United States, the procedure is infinitely more enlightened than in other parts of the world. Under Department of Transportation rules, an airline must first ask for volunteers to give up their seats in return for cash or vouchers. This is conducted as a kind of auction, sometimes on the plane or at the boarding gate. If there are no volunteers, the airline has to pay compensation to those people who are involuntarily bumped. This amounts to the cost of a one-way fare, up to the maximum of $200, if the airline can get the passengers to their desti-nation within two hours on a domestic flight and four hours on an international flight. If not, they are entitled to twice the value of the flight coupon, up to a maximum of $400 and overnight expenses. This system seems to work so well that there is a new breed of traveler emerging the professional bumpee. All you need to do is judge which flights are likely to be overbooked, make your plans and take the cash.

In Europe, no system is sanctioned by law. The AEA operates a voluntary plan whereby involuntarily bumped passengers are offered 50 percent of the value of the flight compon for the single fare up to a maximum of $200, or the equivalent in other currency, for a delay of at least four hours within Europe and six hours for long hanl. Several airlines do not even apply these minimal conditions and, worst of all, off load passengers on an arbitrary basis. There is no provision for asking for volunteers.

The only European airlines that currently operate on the American pattern are BA at Heathrow and KLM at Schiphol. Neither conducts a U.S.-style auction, but they do ask for volunteers and offer inducements in cash or vonchers. British Caledonian says it will introduce a similar plan at Garwick. probably in April 1986, when it introduces a new computerized check-in system.

BA does what it calls "queue combing." Likely caudidates are asked at the check-in counter if they would be prepared to stand bumped, but half of those who are are volunteers. He cites the case of a honeymoon couple who opted to be bumped from a flight to Cyprus and were delighted to spend the might in a first class hotel rather than arrive late at night. One problem, he says, is how to an airline fails to cancel a later flight when a get a seat at the last moment.

America at Table: A Nation Gone Food Crazy

EW YORK — What's cooking in America today?
Plenty. The American palate of the 1980s is undergoing changes that are at once exciting bizarre, dramatic and wildly confusing.

Imagine, even a year or two ago, walking into a suburban Grand Union supermarket to buy fresh cactus leaf, tamarind, purple peppers, fresh tima and squid, fresh fava beans, horse-radish and jicama, and eight different varieties of winter squash Even run-of-the-mill supermarkets all over the land now offer half a dozen kinds of fresh greens, a dozen types of grind-your-own coffee beans, and, thanks to the Japanese sushi explosion. fresh tuna is now just about as common as the canned. One almost believes that if you can't find a food in America today, it

During the last several years, cottage industries have sprouted all over, and once-exotic foods available almost exclusively from France or Italy now proudly bear the stamp "Made in America." Today, Belon oysters, scallops with their coral, sundried tomatoes, slender haricots verts, black caviar, fresh foic gras, big-breasted mallard ducks and sea urchins are now being harvested in every corner of the land. Even one of the American food giants, the Campbell's Soup, has jumped on the bandwagon and is mass-marketing fresh Oriental shitake mushrooms. Until 1981, when a trio of ambitious young American entre-preneurs began a company called Flying Foods, such foods as white-fleshed St. Peter's fish and the bitter Italian chicory known as radiochio rarely found their way to the American table. Today, the company ships six tons of radiochio from Italy to the United States each week. They also bring in game from Scotland, fresh porcini mushrooms from Italy, foie gras from France and yellow peppers from the Netherlands.

Eaters never had it so good. Or have they? Americans have a way of equating quantity with quality. This astounding abundance does not necessarily make for a richer gastronomic life.

There's a lot of bizarre food being served out there. A nation of born-again eaters, the generation of palates weamed on Jell-O molds and fried fish sticks, meat loaf, canned green beans and lumpy mashed potatoes enriched with margarine, is now singing the praises of such unwholesome-sounding combinations as roast beef and Chateau d'Yquem. They are serving tamales sprinkled with white Italian truffles, concorring cheesecake to serve with smoked salmon, and actually asking people to put down hard cash for deep-fried shrimp with strawberry sauce. In the beverage category, the hottest new gustatory challenge is the Cajum martini: marinate fiery hot peppers in vodka or gin, add a dose of bravery, and drink. In New York, restaurant madness has reached dramatic heights. Diners with reservations risk being turned away at the door if Warren Beatty and friends walk in unannounced. Frantic diners send little bribes across fown to secure the hottest seats in town, and because the demand for tables far outweighs supply, people will eat at any hour just to say they've been. You eat not when you're hungry, but when you can get a seat. Some restaurants require reservations months in advance, and it's not uncommon for a business lunch to begin at 11:45, and dinner may commence at the unfashionable hour of 6:30.

The contradiction of the decade is the highly accepted statement that "Nobody in America cooks anymore." Who, then, is buying all those funny things they sell in the supermarket? When the middle class can't be found in restaurants, they're at home eating upscale carryout food or tossing pre-prepared, single portion meals into the microwave oven.

America has always been keen on carryout food, but the pizzeria or Chinese hole-in-the-wall of the 1950s has been expanded to gournet heights. In Detroit, the highly regarded London Chop House now offers a full take-out service that includes every item on its prestigious menu. Diners can order a multi-course dinner for 12 and the food will be delivered to the door in a stretch limousine, carefully packed in bright red-andwhite insulated shopping bags.

In Manhattan, a deliver-to-the-door caterer called The West Side Express offers such daily items as 5-Alarm chili, Buffalo chicken wings, red-leaf lettuce salad, corn bread and chocolate mousse, all charged painlessly on a credit card.

IKEWISE, the microwave phenomenon is affecting traditional family dining patterns both in and outside the home. It's predicted that by the end of this year, 50 percent of all American households will have microwave ovens. Thanks to the convenience and rapidity of microwave cooking and the increasing availability of prepared, single portion foods manufactured expressly for the microwave, the typical subur-ban dinner hour now stretches from 4 P.M. to midnight, and parents and children est according to when they get home from the office, from baseball practice, or the ballet class.

In the "old days" the family dinner hour was fixed and everyone sat down to a shared meal. You all ate the same food, and downed your spinach, like it or not. Now, not only has the family dinner hour disappeared, but finicky palates are having a field day. Junior pops microwave Chicken Nuggets into the oven, diet-conscious mom may settle for baked potatoes and dad will opt for a couple of hot dogs. When that same family goes out to eat in a suburban chain restaurant, they continue this individualist eating pattern. The pizzeria — where everyone sits down at a shared meal — is no longer good enough. What the family wants, and what restaurants offer, is an international smorgasbord, not one cuisine, but many, joined together as many courses in a single meal.

So now, instead of the home cook mimicking the restaurant, the restaurant has to compete with the variety of foods bought in the supermarket and stored on pantry shelves.

UT there is danger in this individualistic, inner-directed approach to eating. At the risk of over-romanticizing the importance of the family meal there is something particularly human and unifying about sitting around a table with family or friends, sharing food. Whether in a restaurant or in the home, sharing a platter of spaghetti, a pizza, a casserole, a leg of lamb, a roast chicken, has a unifying effect. You don't even have to be eating the same food, but it seems that it helps if you're all at least eating a cuisine with vaguely common roots.

Somehow, one's shared frame of reference goes haywire when a group of people is gathered around a table, and one person is drinking Michelob light with nachos and fried potato skins, another is sipping Mondavi red with a taco salad, and another combines Classic Coke and a hamburger.

Likewise, it is impossible to cognitively or (physically) digest a meal that begins with goat cheese salad, followed by pizza with ricotta wrapped in grilled eggplant and sauced with chopped tomatoes, olive oil and fresh herbs, followed by wok-charred spicy blue-fin tuna with mango, tomato and green onion sauce, and, for dessert, an almond daquoise. One does not leave such a meal satisfied, simply confused.

All, of course, is not bleak. The passion for freshness and the simple abundance of such a variety of foods is the most positive note, for if the base ingredients are of high quality, half the battle of good food has been won. Free-range chickens are multiplying like rabbits, restaurants and carryouts are making marvelously good bread, chefs all over are growing their own fruits and vegetables and cultivating sources for those they can't grow on their own. While sophistication and focus are still lacking, it seems that the food phenomenon of the 1980s is

And who can tell, we may now be raising a generation that will someday look back with fond memories, raving about grandma's famous raclette gratin with radiochio, her red chili pasta, her chicken stir-fry with raisins and Sambuca mayonnaise and long for the old days.

STUDY of 47 prominent contempo-A rary British artists by Dr. Kay Jamison, a professor of psychiatry at the University of California at Los Angeles. suggests there is a clinical model for the tugof-war Shepard, Scorsese and so many other artists have described. Jamison found that more than half of the British artists had been diagnosed as manie-depressive, compared to 6 percent of the general population. A study of writers by Professor Nancy Andreasan of the University of Iowa showed that 67 percent suffered from an emotional disorder, while only 13 percent of the control group did. Their findings by no means represent the definitive answer to whether creativity and madness are connected, but they at least indicate that it is more than an empty cliché. The question, then, is whether manic-depression and other emotional disorders serve the creative process, or actually impede it. "Most people who are manic-depressive are more reflective, introspective, can deal with more existential issues when they're de-pressed," Jamison said. "And if you think of a classic kind of manic wit, like Lenny Bruce, there's a rapidity of association and an ability to reach instantly back into the mind, It's clear that if you give hypomania [the medical term for the manic state] to an aiready creative person you give them a big advantage." As if to underscore the point, Jamison helped produce a Los Angeles concert last May entitled "Moods and Music." It fea-tured compositions by Handel, Schumann, Wolf, Berlioz and Mahler — all of whom, she maintained, were manic-depressive.

Dr. Barry M. Panter, an associate professor of psychiatry at the University of South-ern California and the director of an annual conference on "Creativity and Madness." cites a similar chemistry between emotion and creativity. "The material artists use for their art," Panter said, "comes from the primitive levels of their inner lives — aggression, sexual fantasy, polymorphous sexuality. What we know about the development of personality is that we all go through these stages and have these primitive drives within us. As we mature and are 'civilized,' we suppress them. But the artist stays in touch with and struggles to understand them. And to remain so in touch with that primitive self is to be on the fine line between sanity and Yet it remains largely an individual matter how an artist handles such powerful forces, or fails to. For a playwright like Athol Fugard, an alcoholic who stopped drinking in 1983, one of the hardest parts of abstinence was giving up the liberating effect of liquor. Anyone who saw "Master Harold".... and the boys," a self-lacerating memory play, can well imagine bow an alcohol-fed melancholy helped Fugard touch the old wounds that underlie the work. "When I was writing a play." Fugard recalls of his old process, "I would start drinking after sunset and then fairly steadily into the night. And that last carafe of wine at night — that spell of wildness - was when I would set up the ideas that I'd work on soberly the next day." By the time Fugard began work on the follow-up play to "Master Harold," "The Road to Mecca," he had stopped drinking.

The prospect of writing without alcohol was of self-deception. It's not that the creative terrifying. "Mecca' was hard for me because I didn't have that moment of madness at night," he said. "I had to ask myself, could I still get into my dark side? Could I still put my dark side forward without the aid of a drug? And, obviously, alcohol was a powerful drug for that. Nothing I could do could replace it. I've found other things - running, biking, Buddhist mantras. And maybe my art now will be more about light than

EW artists as a group so depended on tapping their subconscious urges and including their conscious desires, as the Abstract Expressionist painters, the cluster of New York artists who flourished in the 940s and '50s. The results were groundoreaking work and tragic ends - suicides for Mark Rothko and Arshile Gorky, violent deaths for Franz Kline and Jackson Pollock.

Robert Motherwell, one of the Abstract Expressionists still painting, has often spoken of the psychological nature of his work; he has described his process as free association - itself a term drawn from psychoanalysis - and "a state of anxiety that is obliquely recorded in the inner tension of the fmished product."

"One of my best friends is a psychiatrist," Motherwell said in a recent interview, "and last summer I asked him, if he had to define psychoanalysis in a single sentence, how would be put it? And he said, 'Chris Hardman put it best — psychoanalysis is the study of self-deception. And it may be that the deep necessity of art is the examination act and the critical act are simultaneous, It's more like you blurt something out and then analyze it. After each brushstroke, you're analyzing it. Is this stroke an authentic expression or not? Most painting in the European tradition was painting the mask. Modern art rejected all that. Our subject matter was the person behind the mask. And we all know genuine analysis like that is shattering to go through. There's a terrible price to be paid for the constant analysis, constant gonpr.,

No other art form, perhaps, resembles Abstract Expressionism as closely as modern jazz. Both drew heavily on the psychology of the creator. Both were innovations that had to light for legitimacy in the cultural world. Outer forces fed the inner fires of both, and that barely contained rage expressed itself in the raw and rending sounds of avant-garde

"The music became a way to be both beautiful and angry at the same time," said Jackie McLean, a saxophonist whose 40-year career spans bop, modal and free jazz.

There is another parallel between modern jazz and Abstract Expressionism. Both became fixed in the public mind - correctly or not — with the stereotype of the dissolute artist. Some of the most brilliant jazz musicians literally went mad. The hero of the bebop era was Charlie (Bird) Parker, a ferociously inventive saxophonist and a heroin addict from his late teens until his death at 35. The jazz wisdom once held, "To play like - Bird, you got to be like Bird."

ing, rebuilding adequate housing; a special Bavarian folk theater, a special "playhouse factory for young people, a special childrens theater, another multipurpose music hall and a "German theater" to serve touring musical companies and ball festivities during the Fasching period.

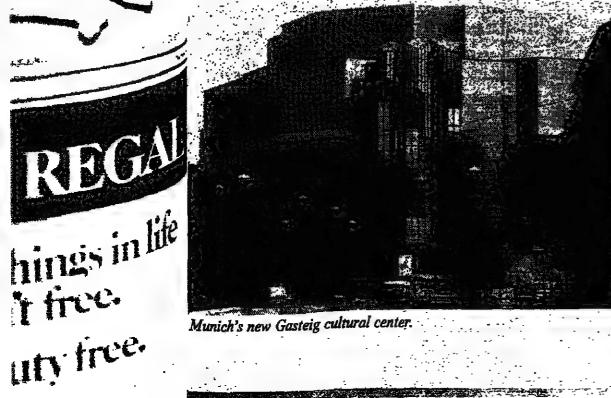

Naturally, most of these new establishments offered a lot of trash during the first months and people stayed away. The city had to ship in large sums in order to keep their own projects going. Everyone was won-dering how quickly substantial "software," attractive productions, new ideas and authors, could be found and hired. Municipal support has remained essential for all these newly founded establishments, and the city authorities must be glad that they do not have to subsidize the two state theaters and the expensive two opera houses in Munich, which are taken care of by the government of

Meanwhile, the Gasteig complex has opened all its facilities. Offering a total seating capacity of 3,500, it means Munich's people can now choose every night between around 50 or more music and theater programs offered to more than 25,000 spectators. The building has been subject to vigor-ous criticism from the very beginning. Though its main attraction, the amphitheatrical Philharmonic Hall (light brown wooden ceiling and red seats), seems to have been more or less accepted by the experts, the vastness of the entire brick building has been heavily criticized. "Culture Bunker" and "Philharmonic Fortress" are two of the nicer nicknames.

Nevertheless, artists and agents have heavily booked the building many months ahead and there is no doubt that the Gasteig will become the focus of the city's music activities. The two weeks following the opening festivities, apart from homemade con-certs, have offered a great number of international clite artists and ensembles.

This is, however, not the biggest problem It is parking your car. There is hardly room enough to park those of the orchestra mem-bers and managers. People are expected to use the subway, which offers special night connections, but acceptance of that idea is doubtful. The traffic chaos repeatedly pre-dicted by the local press was indescribable during the opening; the Gasteig monster seemed almost inaccessible. The city of Munich, a latecomer as far as its cultural center is concerned, has had time enough to muse over the problem. They brooded over the culture but forgot about the cars.

spend a lot of time rushing out and seeing artists."

She has found that the best artists are those who have not done comics before. "They get terribly excited about how you can use illustration as a camera — pan into someone's face, move back over a shoulder, have a close-up inside a mouth."

Oscar Zarate, who illustrated "Othello," was a lonely and embittered Argentinian, the says, who found himself drawing Othello in battle in Cyprus just when Argentina and Britain went to war over the Falklands. "He lost two stone in weight doing the play, he was a shell when he finished, and I understand that because it's suffering from beginning to end."

Ian Pollock, who illustrated "King Lear," is a well-known illustrator. "His work is absolutely homble, you have a distorted mind I said and he roared with laughter and said he would like to do 'Lear.' And of course it's the only hysterical and distorted one of the whole lot Pollock makes the Fool get larger and smaller and changes Cordelia as the play goes on. "In the beginning she's just a blob, you have to imprint your own idea of what she thought and whether she's got any character or spank. And by the end she's grown herself a bosom and she's grown up.

"I don't know if any of this is allowable."

Tauté adds, "but why not if it brings the text alive and makes people remember them?" "The Tempest" is next on the list, and maybe a "Merchant of Venice" set in Nazi Germany. She would also like to do Ibsen and Marlowe's "Dr. Faustus," and she would like to redo her Shakespeares with other artists to offer other interpretations just as new stage productions give a different view. In large part, the point of the comic books is to bring the theater to people who do not have a chance to go - to bring the stage to the page, as Tauté put it.
"I mean I couldn't even read a line before.

With the drawings you can almost squeak like the witches one minute and behave like Lady Macbeth the next. It brings out all the acting potential in a person."

Taute says she is not the first to put Shakespeare in the comics and will not be the last. Probably, as the idea catches on, the plays will come out assembly-line fashion.

"They'll put six people on it with somebody drawing the legs and somebody coloring and the whole concept falls to pieces. The idea that one would churn them out like a Walt Disney studio is totally abhorrent to me."

The books have been sold to Germany, the Scandinavian countries, Canada, Japan. If the United States is stuffy, Australia was so excited that a TV interviewer asked Anne Taute if she would go out with old Bill Shakespeare were he alive. She would.

Still, the comics are in the red and she has bought the title to another series that she hopes will balance the books. It is called "Bluff Your Way," manuals on bluffing your way through philosophy, computers, golf, antiques, music and management.

There should surely be a "Bluff Your Way" Through Shakespeare" as well. "Yes," Tauté said, "I suppose you're quite right."

Getting Your PC To Be 'An Electronic Secretary'

By DAVID E. SANGER

New York Times Service ALO ALTO, California — Nearly two years ago, Apple Computer Inc. introduced its Macintosh and began to revolutionize the way that people look at computer screens. It banished the cryptic "A" symbol that prompts users of most personal computers to enter their first instruction, replacing it with a visual "tool kit."

Now, sitting in front of the Macintosh and other computers that have mimicked its easy-to-use approach, users are accustomed to picking up a fat or thin pencil, a paintbrush or an eastrectangle to draw images on the screen and to dispose of old files by simply dumping them into an electronic trash pail.

But in the Silicon Valley, brilliant advances in software barely

Now Hewlett-Packard researchers are involved in a $30-million to $50-million project to design "software robots" that will perform many of the tasks including designing graphs, scheduling meetings and sifting telephone messages — that the Macintosh still leaves to humans.

"Today's PCs are good toolboxes, but they don't come with a carpenter or a plumber," said Ira P. Goldstein, the jovial director of the Applications Technology Center at Hewlett-Packard Laboratories. Offering the first public glimpse of the project, he explained that "what we want to do is give you some intelligent assistance in how to use those tools — you act as the general contractor, they work as the specialists."

N THE tortured phraseology of the computer industry, what appears on the screen is known as the "user interface." It is best envisioned as a translator; the human speaks one language, the computer processor another and the "interface" software mediates between the two. Ideally, it transforms the human's general wishes into the exact commands demanded by a

Computers can be infuriating to work with, however, because translations are rough at best. To accomplish a specific job, most computers still require excruciatingly detailed instructions. Tell a friend to meet you under the clock at Grand Central Station in New York and be probably needs no further guidance. Tell the same thing to a computer and you have to describe precisely how to get there, inch by inch — and then say which of dozens of different clocks you mann different clocks you mean.

The idea at Hewlett-Packard, an idea that the artificial intelligence community has toyed with for years, is to develop what Mr. Goldstein calls "agents" that clean up those details.

"It is sort of an electronic secretary or accountant," he said, displaying drawings of colorful cartoon characters who would appear on a computer screen sitting at a desk, bent over a file or scratching on a ledger. "Each one is programmed with a model of your likes and dislikes, a model of the tools available to it and a model of its task."

Consider a basic task for an office agent: setting up a meeting. The computer user would issue a general command, perhaps, "I want to see my top staff at a meeting in the next few days." Either through experience or preprogramming, the agent knows that its lethargic human master rarely rises before 10 A.M., so a breakfast meeting is out. Through electronic mail, it begins to poll the scheduling agents of other staff members. Either a meeting is set for a mutually agreeable time or the boss's agent reports back that

Similarly, the accounting agent could begin to set up a spreadsheet outlining next year's office budget in the format its master prefers. And a message agent might sort phone messages according to a set of priorities, putting the chairman's call on top and (Continued on Page 14, Col. 5)

Its Profit Rose 61.8% in Period

By Juris Kaza

International Herald Tribune
STOCKHOLM — AB Volvo said Thursday that it was seeking to make acquisitions that would strengthen its position in food and biotechnology. At the same time, it reported pretax earnings for the third quarter had risen 61.8 percent over the period last year. Volvo said it was bidding to take full control of AB Cardo, an investment company that owns Sweden's private sugar monopoly and con-cerns working in biotecimology and plant genetics, notably the breeding of trees.

Volvo's chairman and chief exec-utive officer, Pehr G. Gyllenhammar, said that together with Vol-vo's current food operations, Cardo's industrial companies would be consolidated in Proven-dor AB, a food group that would be Volvo's third-largest division in terms of sales and profits.

In an interim report, Volvo said it earned 1.597 billion kronor ($203.9 million) in the third quarter before tax, up from 987 million kronor a year ago, but off from 2.046 billion in the second quarter.

In the first nine months, earnings were 5.855 billion kronor, up from 5.609 billion in the corresponding 1984 period. Sales, at 62.339 billion kronor, were virtually unchanged from a year earlier, reflecting the reduction of energy operations. Car sales rose 26 percent in the third quarter, to 7.052 billion kronor, and were up 18 percent in the first nine months, to 25.53 billion kronor, Volvo said.

Volvo's third-quarter operating earnings, which exclude financial net and foreign-exchange effects, rose to 1.245 billion kronor in the third quarter from 1.065 billion kronor a year earlier. Volvo's president, Haakan Frisinger, said the increase was largely due to better profitability from car sales.

Mr. Gyllenhammar said Volvo was covered by forward contracts against dollar fluctuations, but cantioned that at some point, the lower dollar would affect Volvo's margins in the United States and other dollar markets.

However, Volvo officials said a lower dollar reduced Volvo's dollar-denominated debt service.

Third-quarter foreign exchange gains amounted to 310 million kronor, compared with a loss of 181 million kronor a year earlier. In the offer to take over Cardo,

Volvo said it would pay 175 kronor cash and offer one share in a new company built around Cardo's share portfolio in a package valued at 280 kronor per existing Cardo

U.S. Spending

Plunged 0.9%

The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — Americans' personal spending plummeted 0.9 percent last month, the biggest decline in almost 25 years, the government reported Thursday. The Commerce Department attributed the plunge to a drop in car sales after an auto-buying binge in August and September. However, personal income rose 0.4 percent in October, the best gain since a 1-percent rise in April. Americans' savings as a percentage of disposable in-come rose to 2.9 percent in Oc-tober from the record low of 1.8

A spending spurt had left consumer debt levels at a record high and the personal savings level at a record low. Given those two factors, analysts had predicted that spending would slow sharply in coming months as consumers take a breathing spell.

This slowdown is expected to have adverse affects on the overall economy. Since consumer spending makes up al-most two-thirds of the gross national product, many analysts are predicting extremely weak growth in coming months.

DETROIT — When the domestic car makers closed the books on the 1985 model year recently and tallied their sales, they found that the best-selling car in the United States was a truck —

Ford's F-Series full-size pickup. The second best seller was also a pickup — Chevrolet's C-Series.
"Trucks have captured the imagination of the American public," said one new-car dealer.
New models, sleeker styling, greater comfort, more options, better fuel efficiency and lower prices than some compact cars have transformed the once useful but unglamorous vehicle into an attractive option for personal transportation. attractive option for personal transportation.

In addition, with more leisure time and more disposable income, Americans in the 1980s are showing that they want a vehicle that offers not only comfort and styling but also versatility. And the new utility trucks — which look good enough to be driven to the country club and have power enough, with optional four-wheel drive, to tackle rough terrain on a fishing or hunting trip — fit that bill.

While 1985 was not the first time a truck was the while 1985 was not the first time a truck was me best-selling vehicle, total truck sales scored a record high this last model year, with U.S. and import dealers delivering a total of 4.6 million units, surpassing the 1978 record of 4.2 million. "Trucks are the major automotive growth market, Variety and car-like comfort are the reasons."

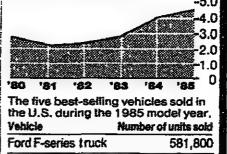

said Louis E. Lataif, vice president of sales operations for Ford Motor Co.

"Truck sales are up for a variety of reasons, but the main one is the new products introduced in the light-truck segment over the last few years," said Michael Luckey, automotive analyst for Merrill Lynch Economics.

Among the new products that have proven so popular, Ford's F-series — the F-150, F-250 and F-350 — and Chevy's C-series trucks are considered the workhorses of light commerce and agri-culture. Base-priced at under $9,000 --- about the

These and others offer such luxuries as power windows, stereo equipment, air conditioning and cloth seats as optional features. Other popular new trucks, such as the Chevy S-10 Blazer and the Ford Bronco II, the Jeep Wagoneer and Chrysler Corp.'s minivans, have even become prestige vehicles to some. The label "truck" covers much more than standard delivery or work vehicles. Small pickups and large, utility vehicles such as Jeeps, big vans and the new minivans are all considered trucks. In the case of the minivans, which look and drive much more like a car, the truck designation was given to take advantage of less stringent emission stan-

Economic Panel Sees 3% Growth For W. Germany

By Warren Gerler International Herald Tribune FRANKFURT - The West

German government's Council of Economic Advisers, in an annual report that argues strongly against rielding to pressures for reflation, has provided some encouraging news to the center-right govern-ment of Chancellor Helmut Kohl, but with a caveat.

While growth in gross national product was expected to rise to an inflation-adjusted 3 percent next year, the report said, the moderately faster pace would not be sufficient to spark a short-term reduction in the country's unemployment rate, which hovers around 9 percent.

But the report supports the government's position of refraining from any extraordinary efforts to bring unemployment down by creating jobs. It urges Bonn to continue to rely on market forces, chiefly rising capital investment, to ease a high jobless rate that largely reflects a wave of young workers en-tering the labor force.

The report, parts of which were disclosed to the International Herald Tribune on Thursday, is to be released Friday.

BP Net Grows 9% on Strong Refining, Marketing

International Herald Tribune
LONDON — A record performance from refining and market-ing helped push British Petroleum Co.'s net profit up 9 percent in the third quarter, the company reported Thursday.

BP said net profit on a historicalcost basis was £416 million ($597 million), up from £383 million in the year-earlier quarter. For 1985's first nine months, net advanced 21 percent to £1,28 billion from £1.05 billion.

On a replacement-cost basis, which excludes gains or losses on inventory values and which BP considers more meaningful, net profit soared 52 percent in the quarter to a record £477 million from £313 million. For the nine months, replacement-cost net to-taled £1.34 billion, up 42 percent

The company, whose top brands include Johnnie Walker and Dew-ar's Scotch whisky as well as Gor-

The joint-venture owners of the Great Wall are negotiating with a syndication of 14 banks in London over the refinancing of the cost of the hotel, which was originally $75 million, but rose to $81 million because of delays. A source close to the talks said in a telephone inter-view that the hotel had paid all interest due so far, but he declined to give further details because of the political sensitivity of the talks, which involve Chinese government officials.

The Great Wall Hotel is a joint enture between the Beijing branch of the state-owned China International Travel Service, and a consortium led by E.S. Pacific Development Corp., based in California.

People on the street in most ma-jor cities will offer double the Chinese official exchange rate in yuan for FECs, but foreigners find it difficult to use yuan in the cities. People trying to spend yuan in the big hotels are frequently charged up to 50 percent more for meals and other consumer purchases.

Standard rooms at the Garden Hotel will now cost $45 to $50 a night, and suites $100 to $110.

"I heard some time ago that it was the government's intention to bring the yuan down to a rate of four to one U.S. dollar." he said. We hope that we'll be doing business in more stable conditions by the end of this year or soon after."

The new policy was negotiated with the Chinese authorities by the manager of the 1,017-room China Hotel in Changzhon, Joachina Burners of the Research of the China Burners of th ger. Mr. Burger says his hotel has repaid $28 million out of its total loan of $129 million scheduled during the next eight to nine years. The repayments are composed of hotel profits, and cash flow from the hotel's office and residential tower used by foreign companies.

The first of the Guangzhou joint-venture hotels, the White Swan, may follow suit, said the deputy general manager, Rang Zuogong. The White Swan has so far repaid $17 million of its $50 million in loans from the Bank of China, the central bank for foreign exchange.

Credit Ceilings Are Abolished by Bank of Sweden

STOCKHOLM - The Bank of Sweden abolished credit ceilings Thursday as part of a reorganization of the domestic credt market.

The central bank said the measure should be seen as a technical alteration and not as an easing of its restrictive monetary policies. Credit growth was cut earlier this year to 2 percent from 4 percent.

The abolition will be compensated from Jan. 13, 1986, by increasing banks reserve requirements to 3 percent from 1 percent

The central bank also introduced a tiered system of interest rates aimed at replacing the penalty rate, at present 13 percent, as the main one at which commercial banks borrow marginal funds.

From Dec. 9, the rate charged on loans above the levels obtainable at discount rate. convently 10.5 percent, will depend on the proportion of the commercial banks share capital and reserves that the loans represent. Texaco Confident on Overturning Damages

NEW YORK - Texaco Inc. has strong grounds for overturning a Texas jury's decision that it has to pay a record $10.53 billion damages to another oil company, Penazoil Co., according to Texaco's general counsel, William C. Weitzel Jr. He said Wednesday he was conlident that the jury decision would be overturned, either by Judge Solomon Casseb of a Texas State District Court in Houston, who heard the case, or on appeal.

On Tuesday, a 12-member jury in the Houston court found unani-

Making the New Bell Labs Competitive Lenders Exposed AT&T Breakup Brings Profound Change to 'Scientific Oz'

By Peter Behr ington Post Service

WASHINGTON - In the opinion of many experts, the foremost center of technology in the world, for most of this century, was Bell Telephone Laboratories.

Before the court-ordered breakgraph Co., its Bell Labs complex was a fabulous hothouse of discovery and invention, with 26,000 scientists, engineers and other employees, 20,000 patents to its credit and an annual budget of $2 billion.

"Before divestiture, a young engineer driving up to Bell Laboratories for his first day of work might have spotted the vast, glittering building across an immense stretch of grass fields and felt as if he were approaching a scientific Oz," wrote Carol Fletcher, contributing editor of Spectrum, the magazine of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers. "In a sense, he would not have been wrong," Ms. Fletchtechnology manufacturer have od, people like Texas Instruments meant profound changes for AT&T's Bell Labs - the loss of 8,000 employees and new marching orders for those who remain.

The fear among some experts and onlookers alike is that AT&T's unique commitment to research up of American Telephone & Tele- will be eroded by the change, weakening one of the United States' greatest technological outposts just as the telecommunications industry is entering a new, crucial round of global competition.

An impressive investigation of this issue, along with other repercussions from the breakup, is contained in this month's issue of

The partitioning of Bell Labs actually occurred in two cuts. A 1980 ruling by the Federal Communications Commission permitted AT&T to enter the computer field - but required it to create a separate subsidiary for this business. About 4,000 Bell Labs employees oined the new subsidiary. A roughequal number transferred from Bell Labs in 1984 to a new, independent research organization serving the regional telephone com-panies. Some of AT&T's scientific brainpower has defected, to start up new ventures. The 18,000 Bell Labs people who remain must cope with a new kind of research and development institution. The commitment to research has not slackened, said Ian Ross, president of Bell Labs. But the goal of R&D has shifted, he added.

"When the transistor was invent-Beecham said it would not retain ed in this company" in 1947, he allowed to be in. And in that peri-

Now, the overriding mission at Bell Labs is to connect scientific work with products that AT&T can sell, as it swings into competition with International Business Ma-

"Next time around, when we have a breakthrough invention, we can do the equivalent of a transistor radio," Mr. Ross said.

AT&T's gain is likely to be its competitors' loss, however. As Spectrum noted, until the 1980 FCC ruling and the breakup, Bell Labs had provided a rich lode of technology for other companies. "As part of the resolution of an earlier antitrust case, Bell Telephone Laboratories published its but other creditors would have to work readily and let other compa- wait until the assets of the banks nies use its patents - among them the transistor - for reasonable lidards. The lower standards allow for more power and better gasoline

Trucks have traditionally sold well in certain parts of the United States for their utilitarian value; along the spine of the Rocky Mountains, in the farming areas of the Southwest and the Plains states. But now they are popping up in less likely places. "Here we are in Bloomfield Hills and we sold more trucks than cars last month," marveled William Hickey, general manager of Alan Ford. Bloomfield Hills is the wealthiest of Detroit's office. He was an executive search suburbs. "It seems that no matter what happens to the economy, trucks sell well," said Louis Stanford, owner Varsity Ford in Ann Arbor, Michigan. "But lately we see young people buying trucks for their first car." There is "a perceived image of the vehicle, especially by young people," he continued, "that it elevates them socially."

Women, meanwhile, "are a fairly large portion of primary drivers of light utility vehicles, like the Bronco II," noted Roger C. Olsen, director of Ford's Truck Sales Promotions. "They like the reliability and handling and perhaps some of them no longer want to be associated with the suburban station-wagon set." Trucks, he added, have become socially acceptable.

Pete Tambeau, a mechanic who fives in the small town of Algonac, Michigan, said he recently bought a Ford pickup as a second family car because he often has things to haul. But that is not the only reason. "I like the security of riding in a truck," he said. "My wife has a small car, a Chrysler Omni, but when we took a vacation down South not long ago, we drove the truck," he explained. "I have a cab on the back and my little boy can play back there and my wife and I can sit up from and

By Charles Dickens. 254 pages. Paper-

N the first week of January 1842, Charles Dickens and his wife, Kate, left Liverpool aboard the steamship Britannia en route to the United States by way of Nova Scotia. Dickens was then a month short of his 30th birthday and most of his best work lay before him, yet already he was famous for "The Pickwick Pa-signs were favorable; his reception in Boston was most friendly, and he admired both Harward College — he called it "the University of Cambridge" — and the many "public institutions and charities" that he visited. He was similarly impressed with the small towns of

New England and the growing cities of Hart-ford and New Haven. In Hartford, though, he

SPORTS

By Ira Berkow New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Without trying to put words min Charles Dickens's pen, it is a good guess he would have known exactly what to write about the coming college basketball season. "It was the best of times," we can picture the old chronicler noting, "it was the worst of times."

Rollie Massimino put it another way. "Times." happy," said the Villanova basketball coach, "and I'm sad."

Massimino was responding to a question about the 1985-86 season, which, on its most Control of the second general terms, is post-Patrick Ewing and post-Tulane.

"I'm happy that Patrick's gone — so we don't have to play him anymore," said Massimino, and I'm sad about the tragedy at Tulane — but not just at Tulane, at the other places where where hearing about possible scandals and viola-

Massimino coached his Villanova Wildcats to the National Collegiate Athletic Association championship last April Fool's Day, in a game that tricked a lot of experts. Georgetown, with the winged Ewing, a 7-foot (2.13-meter) shotblocking menace, was heavily favored to win its second straight NCAA title. Villanova had not finished in the top 20 in any postsesson poll. But Massimino, his crown of graying hair and the tail of his tan suit jacket in constant flight on the sideline, coached Villanova to a 66-64 victory over John Thompson's Georgetown team.

The game was one of the finest exhibitions of basketball by two college teams in recent memory, and one of the high points of college basket-ball at any time. "The NCAA championship is one of the premier sports events in the country now, like the Super Bowl and World Series and heavyweight championship fights," said Jim Valvano, coach of North Carolina State.

College Basketball: Amid Anticipation, Danger

basking in its brightest spotlight, two events were taking place that would define the sordid underside of college sports.

Shortly before the championship game, John

(Hot Rod) Williams and two other players at plane were arrested on charges of sports bribcry - point-shaving in this instance. At the same time, virtually as the championship game was being played at Rupp Arena, the home of the University of Kentucky, an investigation by the local newspaper, The Lexington Herald-Leader, was under way. The investiga-tion looked into possible violations involving Kentucky players from 1978 to perhaps the present accepting money, up to thousands of dollars, for performing phony jobs, for having played a good game or for speaking engage-ments that paid well in excess of NCAA rules.

Now, as a new season is about to commence, the old season is still with us. Williams, after a mistrial in the summer, is expected to be standing trial again soon; the NCAA is investigating the Kentucky reports and, on the other hand, there is the legacy of Patrick Ewing and what his four years of college ball meant to the game.

simino says Ewing was one of the four most dominant college players in the last 30 years — Bill Russell, Wilt Chamberlain and Kareem Abdul-Jabbar were his other choices — while Thompson says, "Patrick set a standard. Besides his natural talent, he was in the best tradition of college basketball. He played hard

But the departure of Ewing does not diminish the anticipation for this season. There will be Look for John Salley, a 7-foot senior at Georgia Tech, to be one of the key players in the nation and possibly the first pick in the National Basketball Association draft. Salley, along with the all-America guard, Mark Price, have clevated Tech to the top of preseason polls. Up near the top are Illinois, with the forward Efrem Winters; North Carolina, with the guard Kenny Smith and the freshman off-guard Jeff Lebo;

Michigan with all five starters returning; Syracuse, with the guard Pearl Washington; Kentucky, with the forward Kenny Walker, and yes, Georgetown, with the forward Reggie Williams. And Villanova? Nowhere in the polls, but the Wildcats have recruited two freshman, the forward Barry Bekkedam and the center Tommy Greis, who may or may not help Villanova surprise people come next April Fool's Day. On the flip side, though, there is the dour aspect of big-time college basketball seen as hypocritical amateurism, as enmeshed in a "win-at-any-cost" syndrome.

David Berst, director of enforcement for the NCAA, investigated an actual case in the nottoo-distant past that began like this:

Under an assumed name and with $5,000 in cash stuffed into his briefcase, a man boarded an airliner for a clandestine rendezvous. Upon arrival, he headed for a hotel room where he was to meet with a high-school senior --- a basketball whiz - and the whiz's parents.

He was not immensely clever as undercover characters go because, though he did not wear Groucho Marx eyebrows and mustache, he did make himself rather conspicuous. The hotel superb players, terrific games, hot tournaments.

Look for John Salley, a 7-foot senior at Georthe register with an assumed name and fished television commentator who coached at Duke out a credit card with his real name to pay for and West Virginia, "how much more money the room.

Eventually, he obtained the keys and met with the family. The man was a booster of a The NCAA now is investigating allegations college with a lofty sports reputation, and he into some 30 to 40 rules violations - a normal was there to try to persuade the family that his complement, said Berst. One of those cases is college offered the young man the greatest educational benefits.

To prove it, he had the $5,000, promises of more thousands plus a car, a stereo, a job for the father in the town of the college - it was out of state - and other assorted fruits of academia. The family, which was poor and with the father out of work, was persuaded. The whiz wound up at the booster's school, received

$2,000 more upon arrival, and his father got the job. But the player soon grew unhappy, and he and his family left town.

Berst received confirmation from the family about the recruiting violations. He also got the goods on the booster, who was tripped up by his bumbling of the phony name at the hotel.

The school was put on probation because the booster "was so intimately involved in the program, it was as though he were employed by the university," said Berst. Penalties included a reduction in the number of athletic scholarships and a ban on television appearances, thus cutting off a handsome source of revenue. The guilty booster was banned altogether from association with the college's sports programs. This story illustrates one of the fears of some in the college ranks.

would it take to make a deal a second time - a deal to shave points or even throw a game?" the strange affair of Tito Horford, the 7-1 freshman from the Dominican Republic who enrolled at the University of Houston, then was not allowed to attend because of recruiting violations, then transferred to Louisiana State University, then vanished from there.

Sometimes, it is the player who takes the initial step toward special inducement.

"One time," said Massimino, "a fellow we were interested in said to me, 'Well, Coach, you know it gets cold in the winter, and I'm going to ne extra money for hamburgers to keep warm.' I told him, 'You're going to have to keep warm someplace else, because we don't pay

Sometimes a high-school coach is looking for something special. Waters recalls a time at Duke when he was trying to recruit a high-school star and asked the player's coach how his grades were. "We have to know if we can get him into our school," said Waters.

"Just tell me what he needs," the coach re-

Above all, the disgrace in big-time college sports is that in the past so many players have gone to college under the guise of being student-athletes, but wound up as simply athletes — as able entertainment business for the university. Thompson believes the experience involved in high-level competition can be positive for a college student, given the proper context. He is known to demand classroom performance from his athletes at Georgetown. "But it's also ridiculous for schools to assume a moralistic stance about athletes when they're caught in violations of rules," he said. "The schools have often used these athletes to raise funds or to bring attention to the university."

"The responsibility ultimately lies with the university president," said Eamon M. Kelly, president of Tulane. After the point-shaving scandal hit his school, he eliminated the men's intercollegiate basketball program.

The presidents have banded together and decided to impose stricter penalties on rules violaters, such as the so-called "death penalty" in which a school caught in a second serious violation within a given period will not be allowed to participate in postseason play and share in television money. That is tough stuff, especially when a team that goes to the final four of the NCAA basketball championship can earn as much as $750,000, and a football team that goes to a major bowl as much as $2 million.

There also may be severe limits put on recruiting and scholarships. This could hurt schools such as Kentucky, where basketball is a quasi-religion and where Rupp Arena traditionally draws sellout crowds of 23,000 for its home games - this year there will be 18 - and where the basketball revenue last year was $2,350,000.

Thompson says that there is "a crisis in edu-cational institutions" today. But, he said, "You regroup, you monitor, you police," he said. "College basketball has gone through crises before and has come through. It will do it again. "If a player can be bought in a recruiting deal Hessians of a sort in a huge and highly profit- It's not going to fall over a cliff."

Mattingly Easily Wins AL Award as MVP

By Murray Chass

New York Times Service NEW YORK — Don Mattingly, who did just about everything this year except put the New York Yankees into the playoffs, achieved a runaway victory Wednesday in the voting for the American League's most valuable player award. He easily defeated George Brett, who led the Royals into the playoffs and then the World Series championship. Mattingly became the first player on a non-championship team to win the award since Rice of the Boston Red Sox won in 1978.

In the voting, conducted before the playoffs by a panel of 28 mem-bers of the Baseball Writers Association of America, two from each league city, Mattingly received 23 first-place votes and 5 second-place votes for a total of 367 points. Brett, whose September slump might have cost him votes, was was third with 174 points, followed by Wade Boggs of Boston with 159, Eddie Murray of Baltimore, 130; Donnie Moore of California, 96, and Jesse Barfield of Toronto, 88.

Willie McGee won the National League award on Monday, giving the Yankees' minor league system a sweep of most-valuable honors. Mattingly and McGee began their professional careers in the Yankee system and played together at Nashville of the Southern League in 1981. McGee then was traded to the St. Louis Cardinals, but the Yankees kept Mattingly.

In only his second full season in the majors, Mattingly, 24, led the majors with 145 runs batted in, batted .324 (third in the AL) and hit 35 home runs (fourth in the AL). He led the majors in doubles (48) and the AL in total bases (370) and extra-base hits (86). Defensively, he topped league first basemen with a .995 fielding average. "I never dreamed of putting those kinds of numbers up," he said at a news conference Wednesday night, "There's no way you can say I'm going to get 140 or 150 RBI and Yet, last spring, on the night that the Yankees renewed his contract for the 1985 season, he angrily said his time would come. "I'll have the hammer next time," he said. He said Wednesday that he had made those remarks out of frustration over his failure to achieve what he thought he was worth as 1984-batting champion. But reminded of the "hammer" comment, he said, "I guess I do have it now." There will be one major difference in negotiations this year: If there is no agreement on a one-year or multiyear contract, Mattingly can go to salary arbitration, where he can show that seven first basemen will be earning more than $1 million next season, and his production this year exceeded theirs.

Conservative Madhouse

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — Triumphant conservatism is now splitting into so many sects that it's hard to keep track of what they are and where they are going. Here are a Neo-conservatives. Thirty years ago these people were called "egg-heads" and admired Adlai Stevenson. Misinterpreting Heary Kissinger's career in Washington, they believe that what the United States needs is more professors with access to the atom bomb.

New neo-conservatives. These are neo-conservatives who weren't born 30 years ago, so they don't bear the stigma of having once been eggheads. Being beneficiaries of a modern college education, most have never heard of Adlai Stevenson. Those who have think Adlai Stevenson was a leftist college that taught the arts and sciences of welfare cheating and went bankrupt.

Antique neo-conservatives. Now diminishing in numbers, antique neo-conservatives believe Chiang Kai-shek could have reconquen China and led it into the United States as the 51st state if highly placed Washington Reds hadn't treated him badly. Some antique neo-conservatives believe Chiang is not dead but living in Mexico and writing popular music under the name Barry Manilow in hopes of winning the hearts and minds of China's young people.

Knee-jerk conservatives. These are the modern counterparts of the old knee-jerk liberals, who created such embarrassment for the Democratic Party before its death. When their favorite issues arise, knee-jerk conservatives first salivate, then demonstrate, and finally accuse their leaders of double-crossing them. As the defunct knee-jerk liberals once did, the knee-jerk conservatives smell heresy and betrayal on every side, insist that their issues are the only issues that matter for the honor of conservatism, and threaten to blow up the party if they are not given satisfaction. Big issues at the moment: reworking the Constitution to allow school prayer, outlaw abortion. Let-Reagan-be-Reagan conservatives. An offshoot of the branch of the knee-jerk conservative bloc that lieves President Reagan has dou-

that, to the contrary, President Reagan would die on the barri-cades if necessary for the big kneejerk issues, if only he could regain control of himself. Unfortunately, the theory goes, control of the president has been seized by White House bureaucrais who refuse to let the president be himself.

Scoop-Jackson-Democrat conservatives. This is one of the more important branches of the so-called "back to the Stone Age" conserva-tive military division. They believe that anything that threatens to slow the worldwide competition in weapons acquisition will be cata-strophic to all humanity. Their name invokes the calm spirit of Senator Henry (Scoop) Jackson, a Democrat whose progressive poli-tics did not preclude a strong dislike of Soviet militarism.

Bang-bang conservatives. Con-temptuous of the pussyfooting they believe characterizes the Scoop-Jackson-Democrat conservatives, the bang-bang conservatives frank-ly declare that they love everything that kills and want the Pentagon to go ahead and build it, no matter what it costs and whether it works

Voodoo conservatives. Their name comes from Vice President Bush's infamous description of the president's economic policy. They believe the way to balance the budget is to cut taxes while spending more money than anyone has ever spent before and, if that doesn't work, to pass a law saving they will have to balance the budget by spending less sometime in the comfortably remote future.

Seat-belt conservatives. These people believe government assaults human freedom when it passes laws requiring motorists to buckle their seat belts. They believe people should have the right to stay unbuckled if they want to.

Does it seem a bit like a madhouse? Of course. When something as radical as what we now call conservatism becomes the most successful political event in a generation, the excitement it generates is likely to bring the nuts out in force. There is nothing the least bit crazy happening with the Democrats these days. Mausoleums are always peaceful.

Retired superwoman Carol Orsborn now spends more time with her family.

'Enough Is Enough' for Ex-Superwoman

By Georgia Dullea
New York Times Service

A SELF-HELP group for women troubled by Superwoman Syndrome has been formed in San Francisco. The group, said to be the first of its kind in the United States, will hold no meetings, elect no officers and raise no funds, "It's the perfect organization for women who are already doing too much," said Carol Orsborn, founder of the 200-member Superwomen Anonymous.

Orsborn, 37, is the president of a public-relations agency, a novelist, a brown belt in karate, a magazine columnist, the wife of a country-and-western and rock musician and the mother of Grant, 6, and Jody, 1, who are not being reared as Superchildren. "But I was starting down that path," Ors-born said, adding that Grant had "been ex-posed to everything" required to create the state-of-the-art child, including soccer, Sun-day school, karate, the Suzuki method of music, gymnastics, Scouts and lessons in French, skiing, swimming and acting.

Grant was also exposed to techniques espoused in the book "How to Teach Your Baby to Read" by Glenn Doman. "You label everything in the house — CHAIR, TABLE

- until you're living in alphabet soup," his mother said. Family life is more low-key these days. Three months ago, shortly before forming Superwomen Anonymous, Orsborn detected in herself signs of Type E behavior, a term coined by a Los Angeles psychologist, Dr. Harriet Braiker, for "high-achieving who are everything to everybody."

At this point, Orsborn decided to embrace "a lifestyle of downward mobility" to the delight of her husband, Daniel, and the surprise of her Marin County neighbors.

The first downward step was to move from a large house in San Rafael - with a view of San Francisco Bay, a hot tub, a sauna, three fireplaces and maid's quarters — to a more modest house in nearby Mill Valley. "We got rid of the live-in, cut our mortgage payments in half and our commuting time on the high-way from 40 to 20 minutes," Orsborn said. She and her husband then went from working 50 to 30 hours a week at the Orsborn Public Relations Group in San Francisco, giving him more time for music and her more time with family and friends. "Td always judged. good friends by how many times I could break a hunch date with them," she said.

Other Superwoman feats no longer being performed by Orsborn: volunteering for every community group, chauffeuring children to enriching activities, shopping for "success" suits, dieting and "going for the burn" in Jane Fonda workouts clad in turquoise tights and leotards.

Nowadays, on balmy mornings she wears sweatpants as she drives to Sausalito and then rows a rented boat on the bay: "I row out to the middle and then I just sit there for about 45 minutes, doing nothing but bobbing in the water."

While bobbing one morning, Orsborn was inspired to create Superwomen's Anonymous as a forom for other recovered Type E peras a forum for other recovered Type E per-sonalities. For $12 a year, members receive a quarterly newsletter — "guaranteed not to teach you how to cope, juggle or manage," she said — plus a membership card and a poster, suitable for framing, proclaiming the group's motto, "Enough Is Enough"

She acknowledged that she had been guilty of promoting Superwoman Syndrome in a column she writes for a small magazine for California businesswomen. Her most recent column hinted that it might not be possible "to have it all," she said, adding, "I'm not sure how long I'll be around."

Another irony is that Orsborn, who con-tends that advertisers exploit women, may be leaving herself open to the same charge by making money on the newsletter. "But I don't see it that way," she said. "I already know how to make money promoting products. Now I'm taking my talents to promote ideas I and other women believe in."

The four-page newsletter carries the Superwomen's Anonymous logo — a big S in a circle with the last few letters of Anonymous falling off the page. Its first issue contains articles on Superwomen's stress and the joys of doing nothing for a full five minutes. Future issues will carry letters from members: for example, the lawyer and mother of we can barely afford and writing this at 4 A.M."
